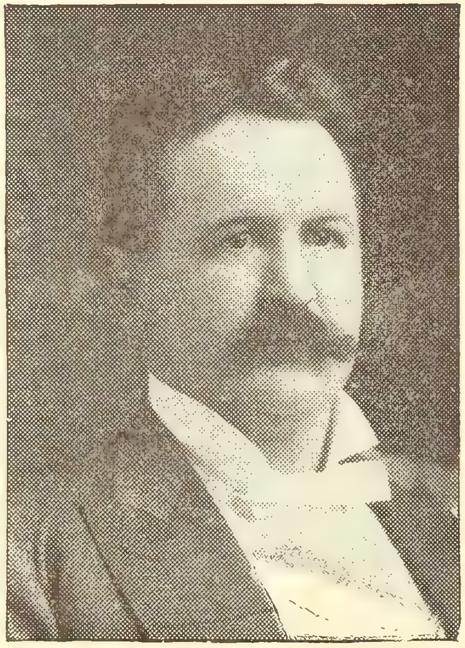
I WANT DIFFICULT EYE CASES

All I Ask is That YOU Investigate at My Expense My Knifeless Method Which Has Cured So Many Cases After Others Have Failed.

Don't Go Blind--Vision is Too Precious



AMERICA'S MASTER OCULIST.

(Copyrighted.)

I want to hear from every man, woman or child afflicted with diseases of the eye. I don't care who the person is or what their eye trouble may be, I will be able to convince them ABSOLUTELY FREE that my painless treatment will do more for them than any other method known to the profession. By this I do not mean there are not some isolated cases that cannot be cured, but I do mean to say emphatically that many and many difficult cases which have been termed incurable by others have been permanently cured by my Absorption treatment. One of the things that I am proud of is in the uninterrupted successful career covering many years. I have eliminated the necessity of using the dangerous and painful knife on the delicate eye, and there is hardly a day passes but what I make cures where others have advised that only an operation would bring relief. My success has not been brought about by a cure today and a failure to-morrow, but it has been a uniform success. Take for instance my treatment for Cataract which is one of the most dreadful and most obstinate troubles to deal with, other oculists tell you it can only be treated successfully by means of a dangerous operation. Today my treatment is pronounced the only sure knifeless treatment known. And why? Because the cures have been so uniform. Had I only cured a few cases now and then, it would be said, "You might be cured by Dr. Madison's treatment," but it is the uniformity of cures in the most difficult cases that causes people to say, "You can positively be cured by the Madison Absorption Method."

Take for instance, these few testimonials taken at random: Mrs. F. L. Wintermute, 121 Second St., Jackson, Mich., under date of October 18th, 1906, writes: "After having been repeatedly told that there was no cure for my cataracts except an operation, today my eyes are perfect by means of your knifeless home treatment. I have regained my vision in six months. Mr. C. W. Johnson of Grand Detour, Ill., in a recent letter, said, in part: "I deem it a pleasure as well as a duty to mankind to certify to the benefits received from using your home absorption treatment for cataracts. Mrs. Johnson was treated by many physicians. YOU CURED HER."

I personally devote my entire time and study to the Eye, and I assure my patients and prospective patients my personal attention, even to the smallest details. No matter what you are suffering from—whether from Cataract, Inflammation, Pannus, Ptosis, Optic Nerve Trouble, or in fact any affliction of the vision—I can successfully treat you. I guarantee a perfect, permanent cure for cross eyes, whether it be internal or external strabismus, without the use of the knife, with absolutely no risk, pain or inconvenience, without confining my patient to a dark room for a moment or without the use of a single bandage.

VISION IS LIFE—BLINDNESS IS OBLIVION. If you value your eyesight, no matter what your disease, no matter what your thought, investigate. It is not going to cost you any money to prove to your entire satisfaction that my treatment is all I claim for it for all I ask of you is to send me your name and address, no matter where you live, and I will send you FREE an 80-page booklet, illustrated in colors, which is a classic on diseases of the eye. I will tell you who I am, what I have accomplished and will tell you in detail of the more common troubles, their causes, their effects and their cure. Also other things of value to you. This is all for the mere asking. Can you afford to delay? Write me today and relieve your mind.

MY OFFICE HOURS ARE FROM 10:00 A. M. UNTIL 5:00 P M.; SUNDAYS, FROM 9:00 A. M. TO 11:00 A. M., ONLY. SPECIAL APPOINTMENT, HOWEVER, CAN BE MADE BY LETTER OR WIRE.

"Announced by all the trumpets of the sky
Arrives the snow; and, driving o'er the fields,
Seems nowhere to alight; the whited air
Hides hills and woods, the river and the heaven
And veils the farm house at the garden's end,
The sled and traveler stopped, the courier's feet
Delayed, all friends shut out, the housemates sit Around the radiant fireplace, enclosed
In a tumultuous privacy of storm."

THE CENTENNIAL FUND

continues to grow. Last week a friend in California agreed to give $5,000 to provide a hospital at Tung Chow, China. This is good, very good. We need land and three homes for missionaries in Tung Chow. The Foreign Society has three families there, but no land nor buildings. It is a city of about 100,000 inhabitants, and we have just opened the station.

Remember the Centennial Fund of $250,000 to be raised by 1909 is to come from personal gifts only and the whole amount is to be for land and buildings. We earnestly request your help.

Please fill out the pledge herewith and return or send cash.

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

—None of our Centennial Secretary's numerous recent clarion calls to duty and privilege is more timely or important than this one mustering our children into aggressive brigades for the evangelization of the home land. We commend this article especially to parents and Bible school superintendents.

—"A Brotherhood," by F. A. Wight (our roommate at the College of the Bible), is an able presentation of a splendid opportunity for Christian men to make great our Centennial. Brethren, write J. H. Allen, of St. Louis, president of our National Business Men's Association, for instructions in the matter of forming local auxiliaries. Write him, also, an appreciation of the great ministry in which he is enlisted.

The Home and the Home Land.

W. R. WARREN.

The fall and winter are particularly the home seasons. And possibly this character of the autumn is more appreciated because it comes earlier and brings with it the enjoyment of the first long evenings with ripened fruits and nuts, and the family circle drawn close for study, reading and conversation. It is a good time to emphasize the supreme claim which the homeland makes upon the home. Family affection, patriotism and religion are all of one piece; and the home is the place where all must be fostered. Whatever other agencies go for their up-building must be strengthened by the home or they fail of their purpose. If the homes throughout the states had been hostile to their governments the calls for volunteers would have gone unheeded, both north and south. The irrepressible conflict was the subject of conversation in the home and of preaching in the church and the recruits came thick and fast, because both the home and the church were fanning the flame of patriotic zeal. Now the evangelization of the states is more important than either states' rights or political union, and it would be well if this subject were uppermost at every fireside throughout the month of November. Talk of the plans and the campaigns of your state mission board and the American Christian Missionary Society. Mention by name the men who are at the front in this holiest of causes. Remember their needs, their opportunities and their trials in the home prayers. If this is done the funds for the support of these self-sacrificing men will spontaneously pour into the treasury of the Lord.

Fireworks and flags and bunting are very well for the expression of patriotism, but it will not be difficult to show even the children a more excellent way. It is righteousness and not military or naval strength which really exalts the nation. Indeed we have had ample evidence within the last few years that military power is impotent unless it is supported by religious patriotism.

Now this is not spontaneous; somewhere and somehow it must be carefully, diligently and persistently cultivated. Where else, if not in the Christian home? Where if not in the church of Christ?

How better than by the co-operation of the home and the church in the great Thanksgiving festival, children's day for home missions? Let every Bible school present the exercise prepared for this occasion, and let every home co-operate in making it a day fruitful of patriotism of a higher and better sort. The Centennial which we are beginning to celebrate would be worse than a failure if we should neglect this great fundamental labor.

W. R. Warren.
Centennial Secretary.

A Brotherhood.

F. A. WIGHT.

One of the most important movements among us to bring to a full realization our highest hopes in 1909, received such little attention, through the absence of its officers at the Buffalo convention, that I am constrained to say something that I believe needed to be said on that occasion. I speak of the "Business Men's Association." We must not forget the words of our Savior, "Come, and I will make you fishers of men." The results of the first two Gospel sermons was the conversion of 5000 men. The Apostle John says, "I write unto you, young men, because ye are strong." He did not say, "I write unto young women." The Apostolic church was composed largely of men. Hear the Apostle in his exhortation to the church at Corinth, "Quit you like men; be strong." If we are to restore the New Testament church we must awake and become fishers of men, and enlist them in the mighty work of saving men, and build up in each church such a brotherhood, bound together by such bonds as are only possible to men. A brotherhood with its Andrews and Philips to go out with yearning hearts after the lost; with its holy fellowship like that of David and Jonathan, whose hearts become knit together because of like struggles against temptation and sin; and also a sustaining force like Aaron and Hur to support the work and be by the side of the preacher in the charge against the enemy as they unitedly capture the ramparts of sin. Are we not, by the very nature of the work we call "the "pastorate," spending too much time in broadcloth, visiting the women and coddling the babies, while that which would give virility and sinew to our great plea is passed by with but little attention? Let us, together, open to Paul's address to the elders of Ephesus, where he tells them of his labors for them as an example and then see this strong man in the embrace of strong men, as they weep upon each other's necks and show their strong affection in kisses, showing such a feeling that would make such a brotherhood a mighty power for God. I am not sure that we have the best name for this association. It smacks too much of money, as if we wanted business men because they have means. What we want are the men themselves. Their stalwart support in every way. We want men to help save other men and hold them with bands of steel, for God. We want a brotherhood in each church that men find in the lodges and saloons. What means the multiplicity of lodges and the springing up of fraternities like mushrooms in a night. Are not men combining in business and trades? Men do not like to stand alone, they want comradeship, and this yearning of men for a fellowship was abundantly met in the Apostolic church, where they were of one heart and mind and even had all things in common. Oh, that we, too, could so win men to Jesus Christ, that His love would possess them, as it did Paul, and this spirit of friendliness might not only be utilized, but cemented and augmented by the Holy Spirit, produce such a brotherhood that would put into the shade all other fraternities among men. Take your church record, my brother minister, and if it contains 300 names, there will probably be 100 men and boys. Write all these upon a paper by themselves and then take one name and prayer, fully consider the possibilities of even one man as a man. Then think of him as a redeemed man purchased at a tremendous cost. Then think, that in that body there is also dwelling the mighty Paraclete making it his temple to strengthen with might the inner man and to reproduce in him the Christ life. Then think, I have not only one such man with such mighty possibilities, but 100 such men. Oh, what a power for God! And then as these men come before you in their true magnitude, pray for them, until your heart goes to each one, like that of Jonathan to David and Christ, your elder brother does to you. Keep on praying until you call these men together and tell them your vision and let them see your heart's desire for them and Christ's will concerning them, and organize them, in the simplest way possible, and send them out to do valiant work for Christ. Such a brotherhood would lift the finances out of the kitchen and fill the treasury with free-will offerings and build our much needed schools and colleges and hospitals in the foreign field and send missionaries into the needy east and the great west and south, and bring us up to Pittsburg with a mighty chorus of manly voices, an army that will shake the continent with their mighty tread, as they follow their elder brother—the mighty captain—as he leads them out to do valiant work for Christ. ond century for the union of all Christians, and consequently the conquest of the world. There is no desire in this article to underestimate the noble part that women have borne and are bearing today in our great work. On them has fallen the heaviest part of the work. We love and ap-

Congress.

The short session of the fifty-ninth congress opened on Monday, December 3. The short session is always overcrowded with business. Three months is a brief period in which to do a year's legislative business for a country as large as this. There is seldom opportunity for the passage of important new bills at a short session. The most that can be expected is the completion of the unfinished business and the passage of the necessary appropriation bills. The most important measures left over from the former session are the ship subsidy bill, the bill for the restriction of immigration, the bills requiring the publication of campaign subscriptions over $500 and prohibiting contributions by corporations, the Philippine tariff, the eight-hour bill, the bill to limit the working hours of railway employes in the interest of public safety, the anti-injunction bill. Besides, the senate will have to consider the San Domingo treaty, the Isle of Pines treaty by which that island is ceded to Cuba, and the case of Smoot. Mr. Smoot has now occupied his seat in the senate nearly four years, and the senate has not yet been able to determine whether or not he is properly entitled to it. No piece of legislation is more urgently demanded by every consideration of reason and justice than the Philippine tariff bill. The first Philippine assembly is to meet next summer, and it is highly desirable that, before that event, our government shall, by a reduction of the tariff, give substantial evidence of good faith toward the Filipinos and exhibit to them some tangible and appreciable benefits of a close connection with America. They have already received many benefits from that connection—far more than we have—in the way of restored order, improved local government and better education, but these are no excuse for further delay in doing justice to their industries by a re-adjustment of the tariff.

No Tariff for Them.

The National Association of Thrasher Manufacturers does not care for any more protection. It has asked for a reduction of the tariff on the steel, iron and lumber which they use as raw material, and are willing to have their finished product compete with the imported article without the aid of a protective tariff. Considering the acknowledged supremacy of this country in the manufacture of farm implements, we should think this would be a very safe proposition. The names of McCormick and Deering are as familiar in Austria and Russia as is the name of Roosevelt. But it is pleasant to see an infant industry which voluntarily offers to surrender its nursing-bottle when it ceases to be an infant.

A Field for Hypnotism.

A new field for the profitable practice of hypnotism has just been discovered. It has already been charged by some ruthless critics, who have no respect for either commerce or religion, that successful salesmen and popular evangelists win customers and converts by the exercise of hypnotic powers. Now it is invading the courts of justice and undermining the credibility of testimony. A man who was suing his wife for divorce and also trying to recover some property which he had given her was telling his story on the witness stand. Suddenly he became confused, passed his hand across his brow with a gesture of bewilderment and came to a dead stop, from which neither the attorneys nor the judge could start him. Afterward he asserted that he had happened to meet the glance of his wife, who was in the court room, and that she had hypnotized him with a look and so rendered it impossible for him to proceed with his testimony. The woman in this case was a spiritualistic medium, which, of course, added to the potency of her glance. If hypnotism can cut off undesirable evidence, why can it not go a little farther and put into the lips of a controlled witness the statements which the hypnotist, seated inconspicuously among the spectators, may desire. Really, this is the submarine torpedo principle applied to the administration of justic

Bryce for Ambassador.

There comes a pleasing but unconfirmed rumor that Mr. James Bryce, M. P., is to be appointed British ambassador at Washington. From the American point of view, no appointment could be more popular. Mr. Bryce is not only a real statesman, who represents what is best in English political life, but he is a distinguished scholar and litterateur. What is more, he knows American institutions and history as few Americans know them. His great work on "The American Commonwealth" has long been a standard text-book on American political institutions, and as such is perhaps more generally used than any other book in American colleges and universities. Mr. Bryce's lack of a title—for he is not even Sir James Bryce—will be no bar to his popularity and usefulness here.

Speculation.

Mr. James J. Hill has been warning the farmers against the insidious dangers of speculation. Mr. Hill is, perhaps, not always right, but this time he is. He might widen the application of his advice and still be within safe limits. The farmers are not the only ones who need it. A financial writer says the country is in the vortex of a perfect cyclone of mining speculation. Certain millionaires have recently cleaned up thirty millions of easy money in "cobalt." Nevada is having a boom. Mining stock is being put on the market with no evidence of value except a nicely engraved stock-certificate, and is being eagerly bought up by persons whose greed for sudden and unearned gains is greater than their judgment as to ways of acquiring the same. Mining is a legitimate and often a profitable business. But it is a business—or a profession—and as such it requires expert knowledge and conservative management, as much as does any branch of commerce or manufacture. But buying mining stocks on the strength of glittering advertisements backed up by no stronger assurance of value than the bare word of the promoter that the price is about to soar, is pure folly, and generally very expensive folly. When any one tries to sell you stock in a mine in Nevada or Montana, bethink yourself what you would do if you were asked to buy a farm in Kansas or Ohio—a farm which you had never seen and about which you had never had any evidence more disinterested than the assurance of the seller that it was a very valuable farm. If interested at all, you would investigate first and invest afterward (if at all). The same method is good in buying mining stock. A hole in the ground is not necessarily a gold mine even if well advertised. It is estimated that during the past twelve months mining stocks to the par value of $900,000,000 have been issued in the United States and Canada.

The Bible as Literature.

Professor Phelps, perhaps by way of atoning for his rabid and (as it seemed to us) not very discriminating remarks about Kipling, has been saying some things in the Yale Alumni Weekly about the Bible as literature. His panegyric upon the literary value of the Bible is true and interesting, though of course not new. His remarks upon the average college student's ignorance of the Bible also cover familiar ground. If all the college students in the country could be put through an examination on the common Biblical stories, the result, he says, would be "a magnificent contribution to American humor, revealing an ignorance as profound as it is universal." Yes, and a contribution to American pathos and tragedy. A bright college boy's ignorance about Adam and Jacob and Moses may be amusing. So may be the struggles of a lame man on the ice. But both are pathetic objects for the serious and sympathetic observer. But Professor Phelps goes on to make two suggestions, which, even if he does not mean them to be taken literally, show how important he considers this matter. First, he would compel every candidate for entrance to college to pass a satisfactory examination on the Bible. Second, he would go even farther and eliminate all other books from the preparatory English course and examine on nothing but the Bible. Both in quality and in variety it contains a better collection of literature than any that can be made by any committee of English professors.

About Divorce.

The Divorce Congress which recently met in Washington was an organized effort to urge the necessity of uniform divorce legislation throughout the country. It would save no end of confusion if the federal government could take charge of the whole subject of marriage and divorce. But since the Constitution makes no mention of it and does reserve to the states all powers not expressly delegated to the federal government, it may not be possible for congress to pass a federal divorce law which will be sustained by the courts. But some pressure can be brought to bear on the state legislatures to secure uniform legislation. The anomaly of the present situation is that, under the varying state laws a man may be (as has been said) a married man in one part of the nation, a bachelor in another and a bigamist in a third. One interesting suggestion which was made at the divorce congress, but not adopted by it, was that, when a divorce is granted for a reason involving an offense punishable by law, the judge who grants the decree shall be required by law to present the evidence to the prosecuting attorney so that criminal proceedings may be instituted against the guilty party.

Editorial

Is There a Missing Link?

This does not refer to the missing link that science has been hunting for between man and the lower orders, but a missing link in the organization of our forces for effective work. With all right thinking people organization has ceased to be a bugaboo, and is everywhere recognized as an essential condition of all growing life and work. The only thing to guard against is that organization shall not hamper life or growth, but shall foster them. When any religious movement is sufficiently organized for the full and free expression of its life, and for the vigorous and orderly prosecution of its legitimate work in the world, it is adequately organized. Has our own religious movement attained to this degree of effectiveness in the way of national organization?

We have three general missionary organizations which hold their conventions annually, namely: the American Christian Missionary Society, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. These are all designed to be simply methods of co-operation in missionary work, one in the home land, one in foreign lands, and the other peculiarly the work of women. Their constitutions limit their work to missions—the object for which they were formed. But there are several general interests vital to the welfare of the brotherhood that cannot strictly be classed as missionary, although, of course, they have either direct or indirect bearing upon the general work of extending the kingdom of God. We have no convention for the consideration of this class of general interests, and no convention of the brotherhood to which these several societies may report as constituent parts. Is there, or is there not needed a representative body from the churches of the brotherhood which would be a connecting link between the churches and the societies, and which could properly consider all those questions of general interest which do not belong especially to either of the missionary societies?

Some time ago we pointed out the necessity of such a convention unless there should be a widening of the scope of the convention of the American Christian Missionary Society beyond that which its constitution, strictly interpreted, calls for. Just now, when the revision of the constitution of this society is under consideration, it is timely to raise the question as to whether the new constitution should provide for the consideration of all questions deemed important to the welfare of the brotherhood, or whether it should limit itself strictly to the work of home missions, and leave to another convention the consideration of other than missionary problems. We believe a majority of our brethren have been of the opinion that the convention of the American Christian Missionary Society may properly, with a liberal construction of its constitution, even as it is, consider all the questions that should come before a representative body of the brotherhood. There is a minority, however, who would cut out all these general questions, not strictly missionary, but they have made no suggestion, so far as we have seen, as to how such questions could be considered. The fact that there are some who are inclined to hold missionary societies responsible for any action taken at our national conventions, which does not meet with their approval, is leading many to believe that it will be better to make a clearer distinction between the missionary conventions proper, and a representative convention of the brotherhood whose object it would be to deal with questions other than missionary, which concern our future well being.

It is interesting to note that our Baptist brethren who have a similar organization to our own are just now confronting this same question. A correspondent of the "Standard" of Chicago, under the title of "A Convention for the Northern Baptists," urges the necessity of such an organization as we have indicated and quotes Dr. Rowland as favoring "A convention of Northern Baptists, to which each society should report when it met in annual session; thus giving one general constituency to which all should present reports and claims." Commenting on this, the correspondent referred to, Dr. Spenser B. Meeser, says:

> This is the ideal condition: a convention of northern Baptists, meeting in annual session, to hear reports of our missionary and publication work, to consider the policies and methods, to make recommendations (no legislative function being possible), and to consider other matters of profound and vital interest, educational, social, ethical, evangelistic, denominational policies, union with other bodies, federation with others, and many like things.

This describes a situation identical with our own. Such a convention could assemble at the same place where our three societies are holding their anniversaries, and would relieve the American Christian Missionary Society, from the consideration of many questions, and of many general interests which have hitherto taken up its time. It would, also, relieve the society of any criticism for any action taken by the convention on any subject outside the sphere of its own operations. The resolution on federation passed at the Omaha Convention, for instance, has been charged to the American Christian Missionary Society. But that society, as such, had nothing whatever to do with the action. It was the action of a mass meeting of the brethren.

The question arises, Who would be authorized to call such a convention? Any number of representative brethren could unite in such a call, but if the board of the American Christian Missionary Society should issue a request of this kind, we believe it would meet with a general response from the brethren. One thing at least we have the right to insist on, and that is that if such a convention be not provided for, then the revised constitution of the American Christian Missionary Society should include, within the scope of its annual convention, the duty of dealing with all questions relating to the welfare of the brotherhood, which require the action of a representative and deliberative assembly.

After the Meeting.

In a great many churches throughout the brotherhood, as well as in our St. Louis churches, just now, special evangelistic services have closed and pastors and churches find themselves confronted with the problem, How can we best care for, develop, and train the young converts that have been brought into the church? No question can be more vital to the welfare of the churches than this and none is entitled to more prayerful consideration. A large majority of these young converts are young people with a limited knowledge of God and of spiritual things. They have been won to Christ by the love that has ben awakened in their heart for him, and by the promises held out in God's word to those who believe in and obey him. But if their religious training should cease at this point their spiritual life would be dwarfed, their ardor would be chilled by contact with the world, their faith weakened, and their usefulness in the church ruined or largely curtailed. Several things are needed in order to their normal spiritual growth and future usefulness.

1. They need encouragement. The older members of the church should make it a point to get acquainted personally with these converts, invite them to their homes, and visit them in their homes. The bond of acquaintanceship and friendship should be formed inside the church. Special meetings at the church for this purpose are also helpful.

2. They need feeding. "Feed my lambs" was the charge which the risen Christ laid upon Peter. They need "the sincere milk of the word." For this purpose they should be gathered into the Sunday-school, into the Christian Endeavor Society, and into the prayer-meeting, and, as far as possible, special instruction adapted to their needs should be imparted to them by Christian men and women of experience and piety. If the Christian Endeavor Society, the Sunday-school, the prayer-meeting, the C. W. B. M. Auxiliary, and the Ladies' Aid Society, are not all increased in their membership, because of the ingathering, we may not anticipate permanent results.

3. They need religious activity. As far as practicable these converts should all be given something to do in some department of the church. There is nothing that develops strength like activity. There is nothing that develops interest in the church and in religion so much as some religious task to perform, some service for Christ. Just here there is great difference in the capacity of the religious leaders in the church. Some pastors and church officers have a special capacity for finding something to do for all the members, and others, apparently, try to do all the work themselves, and have no genius for laying out the work for others. Some ministers are good preachers but lack in executive ability. This lack, however, should be supplemented by the co-operation of the official board.

4. They need a healthy atmosphere. If the spiritual atmosphere of the church is cold and formal, if there be lack of zeal and fidelity in church attendance on the part of the older members, if there be feuds or quarrels among church members, the young converts will be chilled, discouraged and blighted in their religious lives, by this condition of things. The lack of unity, and the spirit of fault-finding, are responsible for the loss of many young converts from the church.

We will be glad to welcome suggestions from pastors or others who have something to contribute out of their actual experience as to successful methods of retaining and developing into useful members the new converts which are brought into our churches every year by thousands. When we shall have become as successful in caring for and training young converts into spiritual manhood and womanhood as we are in winning them to Christ, our growth will be far more rapid and our spiritual power in the world greatly multiplied. To this problem we must address ourselves with a zeal and patience born of love for Christ and for all Christ's little ones.

The Religious Newspaper Problem.

We like to take our readers into our confidence on every question that relates to the welfare of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We wish to call their attention to a fact which has, perhaps, escaped their attention, namely: that during the last five or six years the wages of printers and the cost of material for making newspapers, have increased more than 40 per cent, according to an estimate based on high authority. In view of this fact many of the religious newspapers of the country are increasing their subscription price for the coming year. These facts affect THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST just as they affect other religious papers. We had no margin of profit before. What ought we to do, therefore, in the face of this increase in the cost-price of producing the paper?

Wise or unwise, we have decided upon the heroic policy of continuing to offer THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to subscribers at the old rate of $1.50 per year. We are doing this, too, in the face of the fact that we are now cutting out thousands of dollars worth of advertising which we once published, believing them to be unsuitable for a high grade religious journal. Thus we are deliberately cutting down our income on the one hand, while the cost price of production is increasing. These are facts which our readers ought to know and, knowing them, ought to govern themselves accordingly.

These statements are made in view of the fact that within the last week we received a few requests from local agents asking that they be permitted to receive subscriptions for the paper at a lower rate than the fixed price above mentioned, and giving as a reason that at one time in the past they received the paper at a reduced rate. We feel sure that these requests would not be made, nor would subscribers object to paying our regular price, if they were acquainted with the facts which we have stated above. It ought to be perfectly obvious to every intelligent reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that such a paper as we are publishing can not be produced for the price at which we are selling it. Were the paper to stand alone on its own receipts, the price would have to be immediately advanced or its quality lowered, or the paper discontinued. Our readers are profiting by the fact that we are doing a large publishing business and that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is carried at the expense of other departments. If the price of our paper were raised to $2.00, it would be cheaper still than it was five or six years ago at $1.50.

We leave it to our readers to decide what their duty is to the paper under these circumstances. We shall be disappointed if they do not decide that, in view of the fact that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is offered at the same price, in spite of a great increase in cost of production and the cutting out of a large part of its income from advertising, they ought (1) to pay the full price of the paper promptly and cheerfully, and (2) lend their influence and efforts in securing additional subscribers so as to reduce the cost of furnishing the paper to each individual subscriber, and (3) patronize our general publishing business. Anything less than this would hardly be meeting us half-way in our efforts to supply a first-class religious journal at the lowest possible cost to its readers.

It gives us pleasure to add that the rapid increase in the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—unprecedented in its past history—has greatly strengthened us in our purpose to continue the paper at its present low rate.

Notes and Comments.

> When the Disciples refuse to receive to the fellowship of their churches a true Christian brother, because he does not agree with them as to the authorship of the Pentateuch, or the doctrine of baptism, or the inspiration of the Scriptures, what are they doing but making the organization of sects a necessity, and writing themselves down as the worst of sects. But the original mission of the Disciples was to find such a basis of fellowship as would make the creation of sects unnecessary.—E. G. in The Scroll.

There is a sense in which the above could be accepted as true. No opinion as to the authorship of the Pentateuch, the design or philosophy of baptism or as to the method of inspiration can rightly be made a condition of admission into our churches, because Jesus Christ has not made them conditions. But if we are to accept the New Testament as final authority, obedience to Christ in baptism by a penitent believer was a condition of admission into the churches of the apostolic age. The principle on which the Disciples acted was that if they would restore the New Testament terms of church membership they would have "such a basis of fellowship as would make the creation of sects unnecessary," so far as believers in Jesus Christ are concerned. They may have been wrong in this view, but it remains to be shown that they were wrong.

The "Scroll" of Chicago, quotes with its hearty endorsement the following statement from the "Christian Standard:"

> "We occasionally come across the statement in correspondence, and in articles or speeches, that baptism is essential to salvation. This is neither the Scriptural doctrine nor statement, and with many people he prejudices the real Scriptural teaching on baptism who makes use of it. If baptism is essential to salvation, then no one can be saved who is not baptized. This denies salvation to infants, partially taught believers, and all who have mistaken sprinkling and pouring for Christian baptism. Now, the gospel does not require us to assume any such unnecessary burden as this extreme and virtually negative affirmation. The Scriptures clearly teach that, for the penitent believer, baptism is unto or for the remission of past sins. Affirming this, we buttress our position by the unmistakable teaching of New Testament Scripture. In giving the gospel doctrine, about which many are ignorant, it is most unwise to take an extreme position, especially if that position is not warranted by the law and the testimony. Let us not hesitate to preach and teach that he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, that baptism for the penitent believer is for the remission of sins, and stop right there."

"How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" If anything more were needed to show the near approach of the millennium, it is found in the statement of the "Scroll" that "B. B. Tyler and J. W. McGarvey are among the new subscribers!" "Blest be the tie that binds" is now in order. Prof. Willett may start the tune, and Prof. McGarvey sing bass!

An instructive volume might be written by some experienced journalist on the abuses of editorial power and position. The different forms which this abuse can take are too numerous to be enumerated and elaborated, except in a volume devoted to such work. One of the most common and reprehensible of these abuses is for an editor to wave his "big stick" or little stick, as the case may be, over the head of some man in an official or public position who dares to express an opinion contrary to that of the editor, with an implied threat of turning its columns against the official offender unless he straightway ceases to utter convictions which have not received the stamp of approval in the editorial sanctum. This sort of terrorism is supposed to be sufficient to suppress the convictions of brethren who, in a private capacity, would not be afraid to defend their positions, but who, as public servants, may feel a timidity in subjecting to criticism the public interests which they represent. Is there any way of protecting the personal rights and liberties of brethren whom we thrust into official positions to represent our general interests? Have they any rights which we editors are bound to respect?

Editor's Easy Chair.

Now the year passes into its twelfth and last division and hastens to its close. Spring, Summer and Autumn each in its turn has held sway but they must now give place to the reign of Winter. Fittingly enough Autumn ends her queenly reign, in this land at least, with the Thanksgiving festival. The nation has given thanks to the all bountiful Giver, has been reminded from thousands of pulpits and platforms of its manifold blessings and sins, its perils and prospects, and, sobered by these thoughts, it faces the perplexing problems and stern duties of the future. No doubt the prevailing note in all the Thanksgiving addresses and sermons was optimistic, for we are, above all things, a hopeful people. Americans believe in their destiny as they believe in God, but do not always consider the conditions upon which that great destiny is to be realized. In the hearts of the people, however, there is faith that the God who planted this nation in the New World, and whose hand has been manifest in all its past history, will lead it out of its commercialism, its bondage to low ideals, and on and upward to the fulfillment of his great purposes concerning it. One of the greatest reasons for thanksgiving, with thoughtful people, has been this very process of political and industrial purification, which is now going on before our eyes. There is one article of our political creed which is tenaciously held by the great body of Americans, and that is that no nation whose citizens do not cultivate and practice the virtues of honesty and integrity, of purity in private and public life, of courage and devotion to right, and are not patrons of religion and education, can attain to permanent greatness and power. No man that can not subscribe to that creed can ever be elected to any high office in these United States.

On Thanksgiving morning the Easy Chair had the privilege of meeting with about seventy-five other young people in a sunrise prayer-meeting, at the Union Avenue Christian Church in this city. The morning was dark and lowering, and the clouds were dripping moisture, but in this young people's meeting there was nothing dark or dreary or dismal. Their bright faces, their hearty singing, their earnest prayers, their cheering, thoughtful talks, dispelled all exterior gloom and filled all the place with a heavenly radiance. As we listened to the prayers and talks of these young men and women, and observed how early in life they seemed to have caught the secret of joyous Christian living, in keeping close to Christ as a Friend and Brother, we could but feel that in the religiously-trained youth of the country lies the hope of the church and of the nation. The Christian Endeavor Society of the church mentioned above had invited the societies of two other churches to meet with them as their guests in this prayer and praise service, and in the breakfast which followed. These young people all seemed to strike the same great notes of gratitude to God, and of love and service for Christ, heedless of denominational differences. They will never grow up to believe that all truth and loyalty to Christ are the special heritage of their own particular fellowship. The breakfast was like a great family meal, in which the brothers and sisters sat down together in happy, joyous converse and good fellowship. Thank God for Christian young people who have found in Christ the solution of all their life-problems, and who are making him their Guide and Counsellor in all the way of life! Of such the church of the future is to be made.

Of all the crude, unwise, ill-digested, irreverent and barbarous theories, which unbalanced, would-be reformers are thrusting upon this generation, about the worst is the recent proposition for "trial marriages." And this from a woman! In the eyes of this social agitator, the teaching of Jesus, the past experience of the world, the moral sentiments of civilized peoples, and the very instincts of the human heart, amount to nothing. What does this woman know about the sacredness and tenderness of family relationships, and of the happiness that springs from these relations? Let us hope that the blasphemous proposition may at least serve the purpose of warning the people against the constant assaults that are being made upon the home, and upon Christian marriage which is the basis of the home. Much more teaching of a sane and safe character is needed in our homes, in our schools, and in our churches, on the meaning and sacredness of the marriage relation, and on the essential condiditions of a true marriage and a happy home. The thoughtlessness with which many young people are entering into the marriage relation, and often out of Christian homes, is an alarming fact that should arrest the attention of all who believe that the home is the foundation of our civilization. The divorce evil, which attracts more attention and comment, is, after all, but the outcropping, in the main, of unwise marriages. The evil of divorce may be helped by legislation, but it cannot be cured except by beginning further back and impressing the minds of the young with the sacred obligations of marriage and with the necessity of a high standard of morality as an essential condition of marriage.

Recently we had a letter from a most worthy minister who has been the object of a bitter and most unjust attack by an anonymous writer in one of our religious journals, asking whether it were better for him to suffer wrong in silence or to vindicate his reputation against unjust statements. That is a question which, unfortunately, many a worthy man has to face. The case is sufficiently common to justify a few observations on the subject. In the first place, one who is feeling the sting of unjust criticism, is almost sure to overestimate its effect on the public mind. He is likely to imagine that every one will believe the statements of his accuser, when, as a matter of fact, such attacks usually answer themselves, and, unconsciously to their authors, reveal their real motive. Intelligent readers know how to discount such charges, and, to attribute them to other causes than the desire to promote truth and the welfare of the church. Again, if experience teaches any one lesson it is that any unjust assault on the character of another always reacts against the one making it. We are not saying that it is never proper to reply to misrepresentations of one's position and acts, but we do say that in a great majority of cases such replies are unnecessary. We often give too little credit to the discernment of readers, who are quite able to make a true estimate of such misrepresentations. A good man whose motives are true and who is seeking to do good and not evil in the world, need give himself but little concern about defending his reputation against the attacks of evil-minded persons. God and good people will take care of his reputation.

Tennyson observed the fact long ago that "The thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns," and he and many another poet and all true historians have noted the fact that this widening thought, this larger view of truth, this advancement in real knowledge, has come about through conflict of opinions. One mind sees one aspect of truth from its point of view, while another mind sees a different aspect of the same truth from another point of view, and these come into collision with each other—each perhaps mistaking its aspect of truth for the whole truth—and out of this conflict truth gets to be seen on all sides instead of on one side only, and so gets onward. So universal is this fact that it has come to be understood among thoughtful people that differing minds and differing theories, so far from being obstacles to the advancement of truth, are the very means which have been most used in the progress of knowledge. This is as true in the realm of theology as in the realms of science and philosophy. One would think that a recognition of this fact, and of the inevitableness of differing views, as long as there are differing minds, would teach us all the lesson of charity and tolerance, and enable us to see in our differing views an opportunity for enlarging our own knowledge, and not an occasion of strife or alienation. Other things being equal, that religious body that permits the largest freedom of thought and of utterance, consistent with loyalty to Christ, without interfering with the bonds of love and fellowship, will make the most rapid progress in the solution of current problems and in the application of Christianity to present-day conditions and needs.

The Disciples and Evangelism[*] By J. P. Lichtenberger

Introduction.

The evangel of God's love is the most stupendous fact of human experience. Revealed by the incarnation, explained by the teachings, illustrated by the sinless life, and made efficacious by the sacrificial death of the Son of God, its propagation and spread throughout the world becomes at once the "raison d'etre" and the program of the church. Evangelism is fundamental. Institutions, movements, men, are of value in the direct ratio of their ability to extend the Kingdom. The Disciples of Christ fulfill their mission precisely in the extent to which they contribute to the world's evangelization.

The Nature of the Field.

The specific theme of this address is the contribution of the Disciples of Christ to the evangelization of America. But why talk of the evangelization of Christian America? The fact that 40,000,000 of our fellow citizens never cross the threshold of a church, Catholic or Protestant, gives sanity to the seeming paradox.

Facing this fact Dr. Hillis says: "The church is encamped on the edge of a dark continent of worldliness, and selfishness, and pleasure, and sin." But a moment of reflection reveals that it is not a dark continent of heathenism, nor of perverted religion. America is neither pagan nor unchristian. The realm of our conquest is an enlightened civilization based upon the very fundamental principles of Christianity. The ideals of Christ are exalted, only the people do not obey him as Lord. The dominant factors in our civilization are the undisciplined forces which Christianity has liberated. The twofold problem before us is the conversion of the individual and the christianization of society, and the solution is not easy. Theoretically the former task includes the latter. Practically, however, we have seen corporations, greedy, godless and vicious, composed of men famous for their piety; political parties controlled by eminent Christian statesmen go mad over the spoils of office. Society must be Gospelized.

In the new civilization of the present century with its material basis, its rapid social evolution, its intellectual progress, and its religious readjustment, our evangel is meeting its severest tests. Is it able for these things? We are of those who stand ardent, expectant, on the threshold of the greater opportunities for the larger conquests of the Gospel, believing devoutly in its power to master and control the forces of our modern life and ultimately to establish the kingdom of God on earth.

Paul characterized his age as "The Day of Salvation." However others may have viewed it, history has vindicated the great apostle. The dominant characteristic of his age is that it gave Christianity to the world. I venture the prophecy that when the story of the ages has been written, that which will characterize the present age will not be its modern inventions, its growth of scientific learning or its material prosperity, but missions and evangelism.

The Equipment of Our Forces.

Our restoration movement was born in the travail of a great religious awakening. It was led by men of keen intellectual perception and deep religious conviction. Men who faced the problems of the future resolutely, and who were not afraid to break with age-long traditions. Preachers who interpreted a first century message to nineteenth century men. Unfettered by creed, unhampered by tradition, the old Gospel was adaptable and acceptable to the new age and its marvelous growth bears testimony to its timeliness. For as "a man's gift maketh room for him," so any institution or movement among men finds acceptation ultimately in proportion to its worth.

J. P. Lichtenberger.

Unlike other movements which were likewise the product of their times the plea of the Disciples of Christ refuses to be stereotyped and embalmed in the age that produced it. One glory of our cause is its mobility; its ready adaptability to the ever and rapidly changing conditions of our modern life. The protestant principle here finds its highest interpretation. Timorous souls who fear for the perpetuity of our cause on account of retrograde tendencies to crystalization need but to study anew the genius of our history and aims. We are free men in Christ Jesus and we prize our liberty as one of our most priceless possessions. With a great price some of us obtained this freedom while others are free born, and we shall remain free.

The new intellectual status, the new social situation, the new religious conditions of our era but constitute for us a new challenge and open for us new fields of service. Other religious bodies, as such, must await the revision of their creeds, the restatement of their theology and the readjustment of methods. Unhindered by these, we stand a million and a quarter strong in the open doorway of the new opportunity. Upon no people does the responsibility for an immediate, ardent, aggressive, and progressive evangelism rest more heavily. Shall we discharge it in the fear of God?

The Evangel.

But opportunity and equipment do not alone suffice. The motive must be supplied. The passion for Christ and for men is the one thing needful to turn this, as yet, undisciplined host into a conquering army. The cross of Christ is the dynamic of the church. The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation. We have this evangel. We hold it in its sublime simplicity. We know the way by which we came to possess it. We are no longer on the defensive. The plea of a free Gospel for a free country, of a united church for the United States, sounds the keynote in the song of victory for American Christianity. The open Bible in the hands of a free church "is a two-edged sword that burns while it cuts." We have this glorious evangel untrammeled by human tradition and opinions, but, like Gideon's band, our torches are within the pitchers, not of our caution but of our inaction. At the sound of the trumpets in the right hands of the leaders of our Centennial campaign shall we not break the pitchers and release the light? Our cause hesitates, not from lack of opportunity, nor from ill equipment of our forces, nor yet for the want of an acceptable message, but from inertia and neglect. The rapid and fatal decrease in the percentages of our increase in the last decade should startle us into a thorough investigation of the operating causes. The plea we make is increasingly popular. Others are joining us in its advocacy. Our opportunity is enlarged, but our influence and numbers have not correspondingly increased. Let us inquire into both our spirit and method. On the very surface, however, is not one cause apparent? Our evangelistic fires in many quarters are burning low. All honor to the men who are seeking to fan into flames the smouldering embers of our evangelistic fires; who seek to bring the army up to the flag.

(To be Continued.)

Let us try to make our lives like songs, brave, cheery, tender and true, that shall sing themselves into other lives, and so help to lighten burdens and cares.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Man digs up certain black stones from the bosom of the earth and says to them, "Transport me and this luggage at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour," and they do it. So Carlyle speaks of human control over nature. I have been among the black stones. I had a trip last week to the anthracite region, the richest black diamond region in the world, and had a descent into the bowels of the earth, where they coin $550,000,000 in a single year. It may seem incredible, yet it is absolutely true that while the gold and silver production of this country in 1904 was: Gold, $84,551,300, and silver, $53,603,000, a total of $138,154,300—great wealth to be extracted from the earth in one year's time—the value of the production of coal in a single state, for the same year, was $550,000,000.

Pennsylvania is the second state in the Union in point of wealth. During the four years ending in 1904, it gained over three billions. The total figures for the state, according to the census in 1904, were $11,473,620,306. And the Keystone State furnishes one-half of all the coal mined in this country. Practically all the anthracite is produced there. Think of 75,000,000 tons dug out in a single year! And the same year this great commonwealth mined over 99,000,000 tons of the bituminous coal. This is coal to burn! People are getting uneasy for fear the supply will be exhausted, but there is no occasion of uneasiness. Officials of the Geological Survey assure us there is no need for this generation to worry. They say there is enough in the United States to last four or five thousand years, yet some are really worrying about their fuel necessities for next year. Up to 1865 the total production had been 284,890,055 tons. The following decade it grew to 419,425,104, making the total to that time 700,000,000, and up to 1905 the grand total is figured at 5,970,773,571. According to the census of 1850 the production that year was only 6,445,681 tons, when the population was 23,000,000. From 1850 to 1900 the population increased 230 per cent, while the increase in coal production was 4,084 per cent.

It is worth a day's travel to visit the anthracite region in the Wyoming Valley. This is historic ground, for every school boy remembers that Indian massacre, and has been thrilled by the little wood cut of houses on fire, and women and children running for their lives, and painted and feathered-decked red men brandishing tomahawks, which used to appear in the school books. The story of Forty Fort, of the Tories and Senecas, and Zebulon Butler; of "Queen Esther" and little Frances Slocum, the spider web which saved the man in the log; of patriots spoiled by whiskey, and of English praise for the savages and English money appropriated for "scalping knives"—is not this written in the chronicles of 1778 and sung in the ears by the Susquehanna? And Catawissa, Wapwallopen, Nescopeck and Shickshinny, Mocanaqua and Chillisquaque still speak of the time when poor Lo held sway. Now three or four hundred thousand busy white folks throng this valley—that is, they are white occasionally. Over 161,000 of them work in the mines and collieries, and periodically show that they are "pale faces." In 1904 there were 110,362 workmen employed here in the bowels of the earth, and over 50,000 outside employes, and among them were 596 fatal accidents, showing the dangerous character of the business. One can go miles and miles through shafts and chambers and slopes and workings, the veins running perhaps five miles across and fifty miles up and down the valley, the deepest shaft going down for 2,800 feet. And not only men, but more than 1,700 horses and mules are employed in the mines. Down in the Erebus-like abyss, where I was lowered by the cage, I visited a stable where fifty sleek, saucy looking mules were cared for, some of which had worked for twenty years on the subterranean railways. They seem to enjoy it, but cut up interesting capers when allowed a little freedom once in a while on the surface. They have the same tricks down below that characterize them above ground, and among the fatal accidents in 1904 fifty-eight are charged to the mules, and every now and then the cause of death is given "kicked by a mule." No women are employed, and no boy under 14, though 3,173 door boys and helpers of legal age are at work in the mines.

There is no other occupation as dangerous as mining, and none that requires more skill and care. Every mine must have its ambulance and stretchers as required by law. Accidents occur with alarming frequency. Falls of coal, slate and roof, and from the mine cars, are chief causes. On an average six lives are lost by "falls" to one by gas. The larger number come from negligence. Men become indifferent to danger. The state seeks to guard the miners by strictest regulations, and conditions are greatly improved, there being but one fatal accident to every 110,436 tons of coal mined in 1904. One sees all the world represented in these black cavernous recesses: English, Welsh, Polish, German, Hungarian, Italian, Slavonian, Lithuanian, Greek, Austrian, Russian, Swedish, Tyrolian, Bohemian, Assyrian; more Poles than any other people besides Americans. From 1892 to 1894 the death list foots up to 5,879. It would be interesting to know the loss of life through whiskey among these miners for the same period, a cause of slaughter which is legally protected by the great Keystone State. Looking over the list of men who have been mine victims in 1904 I am struck with such names as: Chanletski, Macajecke, Yascavage, Zatkeiwa, Malanofski, Bublovitski, and Gingloefski, Polihanis, Wocovitch, and Melechefski, Caposkus, Mismienskis, and Juncosky. Bioglionio, and Laxzonio, and Syarcitues, Ovicavis, and Zenaweskie—names, the very mention of which to the red men at the time of the killing of the early settlers would have made them take to the tall timber. Yet with all the accidents and loss of life these people who delve in the bottom of things love their business, and won't consent to serve in the sunlight when once they have a taste of these black caverns, where grotesque trees and delicate ferns, huge mosses and tall reeds, engulfed in some ancient cataclysm, stored up the carbon for man, which they may bring out to warm and make cheery millions of homes and drive countless engines and machineries by day and night on sea and land. What a blessing is the sun, and what a treasure these stores of imprisoned sunlight!

We explored these dark passages and saw the various operations going on, and blew out our miner's lamps to feel the pitchy darkness, and got out with only a few bruises for my friend and guide—a young man, but not so sure-footed as his older companion. The manager who went through with us is John Dooley, a beloved worker in the Plymouth church, and the young man was L. O. Knipp, the successful pastor. He has a church now of 635 members, and last year held a meeting and added 105. Two years ago I dedicated their beautiful church. They are doing splendid service in one of the finest fields for missions in America. Think of being in a community where one can preach the Gospel in twenty-five tongues. We have two congregations in Scranton, with Richard Bagby and E. E. Manley as pastors, with 450 members. One at Wilkesbarre, where E. Cowperthwaite preaches, with a membership of 180; and one at Westmore, which C. A. Frick serves, with 150. These with the Plymouth church constitute our force in this anthracite region, and they are all doing well. It would be hard to find a harder worker than the Plymouth pastor. "A nipping and an eager air" he has about him, and there is always something doing in his parish. The end of the anthracite, they say, may be seen, but the work of the Lord goes on forever.

MY CREED.

Charles Blanchard.

I sing the Angels' Song and dare
To pray the Saviour's prayer.
I fain would ever bear
Bravely my cross and care.
I hold the Christ's own creed—
My neighbor and his need—
That Love's best name is Deed!
And so I sing and go my way,
In humble pathways, day by day.
I know not why life's mysteries mock
Our wisdom. I would rather walk
With God, believing yet
That God is Love, and Love cannot forget.

A Divine Ordinance

"Where the Scriptures speak we speak, and where the Scriptures are silent we are silent," is a significant and an important statement, which was more used and perhaps better understood by the fathers of the "Restoration Movement" than by many now who wear only the name Christian. Not so with the phrase, "Ministerial relief," which is more used and better understood by the Disciples to-day than by the fathers, though many have yet to know its importance.

Ministerial relief is significant, not only of the needs of some of our good brethren in the ministry, but also of the obligation and responsibility of the church to supply that need. In that divine ordination, "those who preach the Gospel shal live of the Gospel," it is as certainly ordained that the church shall give as that the ministry shall receive. It is Christ's ministry, it is Christ's church. All belongs to him, and he is all in all. He can not use the ministry without the church, and he cannot use the church without the ministry. This divinely constructed bit of spiritual machinery is one of the most important agencies in all the universe. Upon it God depends for the final consummation of his holy purpose manifest in the gift of his Son. That we depend upon God is true; that God depends upon us is equally true. We can not live without his blessings; he can not save the world without our service. "We are laborers together with God," but only as we do his will.

The Whole Church.

It is often the case that some special mission work is undertaken and carried on by a single congregation; and where there is the ability this is a very good thing to do. But for the larger work in meeting the obligations the Lord has laid upon his people to preach the Gospel in all the world, we organize to systematically gather the funds and wisely work the fields. Hence, our missionary societies. A single congregation with the financial ability might elect to support some aged or disabled minister who has been forced into retirement, and this wheel within a wheel would work in perfect harmony with the divine will. Indeed, it would be a most Christlike thing to do. But only an occasional congregation would be able to do this, in addition to other financial obligations. Therefore, in order to meet the obligations of these larger demands we organize a department of the general work and call it ministerial relief. It is God's will and his order that this work be done, and our wisdom to do it through the agency of organization, the supreme thing before us being, not the organization, though it be essential, but the observance of this divine ordinance, the support of the Lord's ministry.

There are among us good brethren who seem to think that "pioneer work" in this "Restoration Movement" is all done. That the pioneer preachers have all gone to their reward, and there is little or no need for this kind of work longer. In fact, that the term "pioneer" belongs to a bygone age. To recognize just two or three things will easily clear up this unfortunate misunderstanding. And to begin with, just as long as there is a mission field anywhere in all the world there will be pioneer work to be done. Just as long as preachers continue to live they will continue to grow old. And just as long as preachers so love the Lord and desire the salvation of their fellow men that they will do pioneer work without salary consideration, they will continue to come to the sunset of life like their Master with no place to call their own where they can lay their heads, or support provided save that only which God ordained. And this support is theirs, not as a charity or benevolence, but as their just dues for having laid their lives and their all upon the altar of the Kingdom in the long years of useful service they so freely gave the Master's cause. These noble men have hearts that have been pained and sensibilities that have been chagrined, not because they are poor and needy, but because the church which is now reaping from their sowing has failed in her sacred duty in making just returns to her Lord.

What We are Doing.

For a few years we have been pretending to support some of our worthy, worn-out, old preachers. We say pretending, for that is about all it has been. One hundred dollars a year for a man and his wife with no other income, cannot be called support. We may call it help, assistance, something, but not support. A brotherhood of more than a million, standing for the restoration of the practice of Apostolic Christianity, with the wealth of the Disciples, and the few men and women needing this support, doling out the pitiful sum of sixty to one hundred dollars a year for one, or it may be two persons, and call it support, brethren, is a travesty on Christianity, and makes "Our Plea" a mere pretense. We may not expect to influence the world by our preaching if it be not supported by our practice. It is not our pleasure, but our duty to say these things, for we do ourselves as a people and the plea we make an injustice by the insignificant support we give the work of Ministerial Relief. It is little less than a reproach that ten thousand churches of Christ averaged less than sixty cents each for this work last year.

It may be our duty to point out the sin of sectarianism, to emphasize the scripturalness of Christian unity, and to lay great stress upon the importance of world-wide evangelism, but it is no less our duty to magnify the gospel ministry by an adequate, just and willing support. The ministry is a holy calling, its support a divine ordinance. We cannot afford this indifference to this matter. We must give to it the attention its importance, necessity, and God demand.

Needs of the Work.

The matter of first importance in this, as in all departments and enterprises of the church, is for the preachers, the divinely ordained leaders of the people, to understand and realize their relation to the work. "Like priest—like people" is old but true. There is no church problem that is not a preacher problem: that is to say, the preacher holds the key to the solution. His leadership is the determining factor.

The next important and essential thing in connection with this work is to under-

NO MEDICINE

But Change of Food Gave Final Relief.

Most diseases start in the alimentary canal—stomach and bowels.

A great deal of our stomach and bowel troubles come from eating too much starchy and greasy food.

The stomach does not digest any of the starchy food we eat—white bread, pastry, potatoes, oats, etc.—these things are digested in the small intestines, and if we eat too much, as most of us do, the organs that should digest this kind of food are overcome by excess of work, so that fermentation, indigestion, and a long train of ails result.

Too much fat also is hard to digest and this is changed into acids, sour stomach, belching gas, and a bloated, heavy feeling.

In these conditions a change from indigestible foods to Grape-Nuts will work wonders in not only relieving the distress but in building up a strong digestion, clear brain and steady nerves. A Wash. woman writes:

"About five years ago I suffered with bad stomach—dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation—caused, I know now, from eating starchy and greasy food.

"I doctored for two years without any benefit. The doctor told me there was no cure for me. I could not eat anything without suffering severe pain in my back and insides, and I became discouraged.

"A friend recommended Grape-Nuts and I began to use it. In less than two weeks I began to feel better and inside of two months I was a well woman and have been ever since.

"I can eat anything I wish with pleasure. We eat Grape-Nuts and cream for breakfast and are very fond of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

stand that it is the work of the church, and not simply the work of the Board of Ministerial Relief. That the Board is only the agency through or by which the church is supporting her aged and disabled ministers. To so regard this matter will prove a satisfactory solution of all the problems connected with the work.

Still another item of no small import is that the church recognize that her responsibility in this matter is not only to the aged and disabled ministers, but especially to the Father himself, for by his own ordination the duty of this ministry is laid upon his people. It is through the temporal blessings the Father gives his church that he expects to furnish the support he ordained for those who preach the gospel. God and his people are one when the people are with him in his plans and work.

$25,000 are needed in this work this year if we shall do our duty toward God and to the old preachers. And if we shall have a conscience void of offense before God, our next annual report will show even a much larger amount than this. Some of our annuitants ought to receive at least $300 a year; instead they are receiving $100. Others receiving $60 or $80 ought to receive $200. And, brethren, this half-hearted way of doing the Lord's will is not due to our inability, but to our indifference, and we must waken up. We cannot afford as a people, nor as individuals, to take such a record before the judgment throne. The old preachers can afford to go half clad and even half fed, but the church cannot afford to allow them to suffer such injustice. No! brethren, no! At least five thousand preachers ought to interest as many congregations to make their offerings to do this work December 16, and instead of hunger and cold, there would be joy and gladness. Where is the preacher among us who can expect the Father's blessing upon his work if he neglect this sacred duty? Help us, O God!

From the Other Side.

The following extracts were taken from some recent letters received and are given here to show the good spirit that prevails among those who compose our "Ministerial relief family." Aside from duty and religious obligation, it ought to be a pleasure to any true disciple of Jesus Christ to assist such people. If our spirit toward them in their need was like theirs toward us in our indifference, we ourselves would be happier, and they would be abundantly supplied with life's necessities; yea, they might even have a few of its comforts, for we would spare of our abundance.

"Dear Bro. Orcutt:

Your draft of October 1st received. I have no language that will fully convey to you and the Board of Ministerial Relief the gratitude of my heart for such relief in my need of help. I feel proud of my brethren for whom I labored for fifty years so assiduously and lovingly that they remember me now in my weakness. In the midst of my falling tears I say, God bless the dear brethren into whose hearts he has put it to remember the old and needy. If I had the means I would enrich this fund, for I was hungry and you gave me meat.

Your humble brother,

Dear Brethren in Christ:

My old heart was made to rejoice to-day on receiving the ten dollar check. You know you have my sincere thanks. It will enable me to have a few comforts which I could not have without it. I almost gave my life in caring for my dear husband so many long years ere he was called to rest, but God has been so good to me, and I rejoice in the hope of eternal life when these pains and aches are over. Again thanking you, I am,

Your sister in the faith,

Dear Sirs:

I am truly grateful for the remittance you send me, and certainly appreciate the same. The amount just lacked $3.00 of paying my house rent and I am still unable to do anything in the way of work. Therefore your favors are thankfully received.

Gratefully yours,

Dear Bro. Orcutt:

Your very kind and welcome letter of October 2, containing draft for $25.00 received, for which I sincerely thank you. I can't tell you what a burden of care your timely remittance lifts just at this time of the year when winter supplies are pressing upon us and to be able by the liberal help of the Board to meet these necessities is surely gratifying to me. But best of all comes to us your words of Christian sympathy and good cheer. God bless you and the Board for them, and may the Father's loving care ever guide you all in your work of love for his sake is the prayer of

Dear Bro. Orcutt:

With grateful hearts we most thankfully acknowledge the receipt of your highly appreciated letter of the 2nd inst., with New York draft for $25.00. As you so kindly say, this sum can not meet all our necessities, but it does help us so much. We often regret we could not do without it and let some other faithful servant of our Lord have it. Wife joins me in sincere thanks and humble prayer to the kind heavenly Father to abundantly bless each member of your Board and every contributor thereto.

SCOFFERS

Often Make the Staunchest Converts.

The man who scoffs at an idea or doctrine which he does not fully understand has at least the courage to show where he stands.

The gospel of Health has many converts who formerly laughed at the idea that coffee and tea, for example, ever hurt anyone. Upon looking into the matter seriously, often at the suggestion of a friend, such persons have found that Postum Food Coffee and a friend's advice have been their salvation.

"My sister was employed in an eastern city where she had to do calculating," writes an Okla. girl. "She suffered with headache until she was almost unfitted for duty.

"Her landlady persuaded her to quit coffee and use Postum and in a few days she was entirely free from headache. She told her employer about it, and on trying it, he had the same experience.

"My father and I have both suffered much from nervous headache since I can remember, but we scoffed at the idea advanced by my sister, that coffee was the cause of our trouble.

"However, we quit coffee and began using Postum. Father has had but one headache now in four years, due to a severe cold, and I have lost my headaches and sour stomach which I am now convinced came from coffee.

"A cup of good hot Postum is satisfying to me when I do not care to eat a meal. Circumstances caused me to locate in a new country and I feared I would not be able to get my favorite drink, Postum, but I was relieved to find that a full supply is kept here with a heavy demand for it." Our Budget —Thanksgiving Day is past but giving thanks is a perpetual duty.

—Gratitude for blessings received is a noble trait of character.

—December 16—Ministerial Relief Day—will be an opportunity for expressing our gratitude to the old preachers who have given their lives to the Cause we love and who now, in their old age, are dependent on their brethren for their support.

—We devote some space to this holy cause in this number of this paper and we earnestly wish that all our other churches might have fellowship in this ministry of love toward our aged and helpless veterans and their dependent families.

—One month now only remains of the year 1906. What we are to do in this year of our Lord must be done soon, if it is to have a place in the record.

—Let us fill this month with earnest labor and prayer.

—C. D. Haskell has entered upon his second year with the church at Williamsville, Ill.

—B. L. Wray reports 101 additions at Budd Park, Kansas City, during the last fourteen months.

—F. W. Burnham has resigned at Decatur and accepted a call to the First Church, Springfield, Ill.

—Evangelist C. A. McDonald, of Akron, Ohio, is assisting S. P. Moody in a meeting at his church in Clinton, Ohio.

—L. L. Carpenter will dedicate at Marcus, Ia., December 9. The congregations in the vicinity are invited to attend.

—The West End Church of Christ, Chicago, has been dedicated. There is now a membership of about forty, all told.

—Jacob Waters has resigned at Ocean View, Del., and is now open for evangelistic work or a permanent engagement.

—H. K. Shields, of Rochester, Ind., will be the singer and helper in a meeting that is to be held at W. F. Richardson's church early in the new year.

—James M. Bell, formerly minister of the First Christian Church at Bellvernon, Pa., has accepted a call to McKinney, Tex., beginning there December 2.

—W. S. Mesnard, who has received an invitation to remain a third year at Mason, Ill., could take work for half time for some Illinois church after January 1.

—James N. Crutcher reports increasing audiences and additions at almost every service, as he enters upon his third year's pastorate of the church at Chillicothe, Mo.

—James T. Nichols, editor and publisher of the "Christian Union," Des Moines, Ia., has just recovered from a severe spell of typhoid fever, and has resumed his editorial work.

—A. W. Kokendoffer received a call to the South Prospect Church, Kansas City, to succeed J. J. Morgan, but he will not leave the work which he has so well in hand at Mexico, Mo.

—An increase of from $8 to $30 is the good report from the offering in the interests of Home Hissions of the Bible School at Farmington, Mo., where Edward Owers is pastor.

—C. L. Organ, who is now one of the State evangelists of Iowa, preached on 288 days last year, had 390 additions to the churches, at an expense to the State Board of $1.12 each.

—R. B. Helser will begin a third year's service with the church at Fayette, Mo., on January 1, with his second increase of salary. There was a forward movement all along the line.

—J. Will Walters is to assist C. C. Taylor in a meeting at Norborne, Mo., and will lecture in Tina while in the state. N. S. Haynes will supply his pulpit at Niantic during his absence.

—The congregation at Brownington, Mo., is repairing its house of worship, and its minister, S. E. Hendrickson, reports that the outlook is brighter there than it has been for some time.

—Nearly every family represented in the church at Woodbine, Ia., is now visited weekly by one of our church papers. This church recently sent $25 to Iowa missions. B. F. Hall is its minister.

—The brethren at Malvern, Mills County, Ia., are encouraged in their work under Brother Utterback. They are rebuilding the church at a cost of $4,000, and expect to dedicate the first of the year.

There is none of our Christian benevolences that makes a stronger appeal to the heart side of our religion than that which ministers to the necessities of our disabled and dependent ministers and their wives. In the days of their strength and vigorous manhood these men gave themselves unstintedly to the work of preaching the Gospel, regardless of any material compensation. So great was their zeal in ministering to the spiritual needs of the people of their day that they entirely overlooked the duty of the churches to minister to their temporal necessities. Old age or untimely weakness caused by disease has now cut off their ability to provide for themselves, and it remains with the churches which exist as the fruit of their labors and the labors of men likeminded to see that these aged and infirm veterans of the cross are not forgotten and neglected in the evening of their lives. To prevent this the Ministerial Relief Fund was organized by the initiative and unceasing labors of our lamented A. M. Atkinson. The third Lord's day in December is the day set apart for an offering from the churches for this fund. We trust that no church among us will be found wanting in its duty to this blessed ministry of love.

—Stephen J. Corey writes us that some great missionary rallies are being held in the Southland. The Kimberlin Heights students have taken it upon themselves to support a native preacher in India.

—A note from Peter Ainslie says that the Baltimore brethren decided to lay the corner stone of the Christian Temple on December 2. We hope to give an illustration of this rather novel church home.

—C. E. Elmore, who has just been conducting a good meeting at Roanoke, Va., will assume the work at Crewe. Brother Elmore is a strong evangelist. His sermons are said to be models of simplicity and force.

—T. M. Myers, who has gone out to hold a meeting at Medical Lake, Wash., writes that the prospects are good. Although "our people" are few and far between, they seem to mean business in everything they do, he says.

—There is probably no truer philanthropy in which a church or other fraternity could engage than in assisting some unfortunate to the benefits promised by the New Hope Treatment referred to in another column.

—George C. Ritchey has been compelled to cancel meetings at Meridian, Idaho, and Falls City, Ore., in order to enter upon the work of state evangelist of the northwest district of Oregon, beginning in January. His brother, A. F. Ritchey, will act as his singer.

It is the right thing to do. The schools are lining up joyously. Let us make it the great day of the year.

—John G. M. Luttenberger, having returned from his trip to Europe, has opened an office in the Century building, St Louis, and will practice medicine, but will probably give his Sundays to the work of our church in Carondelet.

—It will be of interest to Bethany boys and, indeed, to the brotherhood at large, to know that a part of the Alexander Campbell farm is being sold off for building lots. Full particulars may be obtained from B. E. Hanes, Parkersburg, W. Va.

—W. S. Crockett, of Olympia, Wash., is one of those pastors who is always at work. He is held in greatest esteem, and A. D. Skaggs, who has just held a meeting for him, writes that in his thirty-four years' ministry he has never worked with a more lovable man.

—J. M. Cranford, Jr., of New London, Ia., writes that the meetings in progress at our church there, under the leadership of Evangelist S. J. Vance, of Carthage, Mo., are attracting large and appreciative audiences. Pastors of other churches are cordially invited to assist.

—George Darsie, of the First Church, Akron, Ohio, announces a series of sermons on "Fundamental Teachings." The morning subjects are on such themes as "The Divinity of Christ," "The Resurrection of the Body," "Life Everlasting," "The Penalty and the Remedy for Sin," and "The Holy Spirit." In the evenings he is to consider New Testament conversion.

—The longest pastorate in the history of the church at Fisher, Ill., has been that of S. Elwood Fisher, who has just completed four years of ministry there. During his incumbency there have been 161 additions with $6,800 raised for all purposes. The church will have an evangelistic meeting in January.

—Mrs. A. A. Buxton, State Primary Superintendent of Sunday-schools in Missouri, writes that the officers are anxious to secure a list of all the primary superintendents and teachers of the Christian churches in the State, and would like to receive names at once. Address 3001 East Sixth street, Kansas City, Mo.

—J. G. McNutt, who has just held a meeting at Cadwell, a little town ten miles from Sullivan, Ill., reports the church, which is in a wealthy country and has among its members people of influence, in need of a preacher. By combining with another church near by a salary of $1,000 might be assured, but none but a worker need apply.

—"Work for Men" is a keynote of John R. Ewers. Precisely twenty-five men between the ages of 18 and 35 have been received into the First Christian Church, Youngstown, Ohio, during the fourteen months of his pastorate. Eighty-three people in all have entered the fellowship in that time and a men's club numbering seventy has been organized.

—There is a better spirit in the south. For the first time in the history of the organizations fraternal messages were extended between the Georgia Baptist convention and our own. From the reports in our news columns it will be seen that our brethren in Georgia and Alabama are taking new courage and are lining up for aggressive work that shall have in it the spirit of Christ rather than the mere spirit of conquest and personal opinion, that has frequently manifested itself in the past, not only in the south but in the north as well.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

Hoarseness or loss of voice immediately relieved. Nothing excels this simple remedy

—J. J. Morgan, of the South Prospect Church, Kansas City, where a good meeting has just been held by J. H. O. Smith and H. H. Saxton, offered his resignation to the church at the beginning of the meeting. Brother Morgan's health has for some time been such that he has decided to seek a warmer climate and will take up the work at the First Church, Fort Worth, Tex.

—Many evangelists and preachers failed to remember the warning we printed in our Budget week before last and sent us telegrams on Monday which we could not print in view of the fact that our issue for that week had to go to press on Saturday because of its extra size and the Thanksgiving holiday. Until further notice we will again, as usual, be able to handle telegrams received on Monday morning.

—One dollar to missions for every $4.50 to current expenses is the account of the only church of the Disciples of Christ in McHenry County, Illinois. This is located at Nunda and the membership is small, and hence have to give liberally to sustain the local work. A building fund is being raised, but the brethren do not neglect, on that account, the preaching of the gospel to the wide world. H. B. Robison reports two baptized there November 25.

—"The Sphere and Work of Christian Women" was the title of the sermon preached by J. L. Hill at the Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, in observance of C. W. B. M. day, December 2. For breadth of view, clearness of vision, and vigor of thought, the sermon will linger long with those who were so fortunate as to hear it. This historic church is fortunate in having as its pastor a man so well equipped to carry forward the arduous work of a down town church, and under his wise leadership the church is advancing in every department of work.

—Nearly all our churches in Kansas City were represented at the celebration of the sixty-ninth anniversary of the founding of the Hyde Park Church, of which Louis Cupp is the greatly beloved pastor. George L. Snively assisted on this happy occasion, and part of the worship consisted in the raising of $3,700 for the payment of debts contracted during the building of the beautiful new stone edifice. Brother Snively had the pleasure of meeting nearly all of the pastors of the Christian churches in the city, where our growth has been almost phenomenal and of which it may be said more truly, perhaps, than of any other city, that we have not many churches there, but rather one church meeting in many places.

—Cecil J. Armstrong, who has been for five years pastor of the First Christian Church, Winchester, Ky., has accepted a unanimous call to the River Street Church, Troy, N. Y. He will enter upon his new field of work December 9. Brother Armstrong has a fine record at Winchester, there having been 191 additions during his pastorate, $11,375 contributed to missions, and over $25,000 for all purposes. The officers have presented to the Winchester church a very commendatory statement concerning him and his work. We published in our issue of November 22 Brother Armstrong's sermon upon G. L. Wharton, who was the living link missionary of the Winchester church, while a few weeks prior to this we published his speech before the convention at Buffalo on "The Missionary Bump."

—Frank W. Allen, of Odessa, Mo., within the past few days had calls from the churches at Windsor, and at Twenty-second and Prospect, Kansas City. He will not go to Windsor, and is still in doubt about Kansas City. He says: "I love this little country town and its people. It is about as near Kentucky as any place I know of in Missouri, and that is the highest praise." The meeting at Odessa closed with five confessions. From the first the house was crowded and the interest was unusual on the part of the other churches in town. Save on Sunday nights the Presbyterian pastor did not miss a service, even to dismissing his prayer meeting twice to be present. The audiences were from every denomination and the meeting looked very much like a union

"Christian Union."

I recently read with care and interest Bro. J. H. Garrison's most recent book which bears the name "Christian Union," a book of 207 pages from the press of The Christian Publishing Company.

The major part of the book is given to facts with which very many of us are quite familiar. This, however, is used as the impregnable rock-foundation for the superstructure which deals with the present day phases of Church Union. Our theory of union is daily being cast into the crucible of practice. If we are to be taken seriously by our religious neighbors when we speak in behalf of union, we must discover a way in which to co-operate freely with them while we remain absolutely loyal to what is true. Loyalty and Liberty—both to be held firmly at the same time. Brother Garrison is both clear and strong in presenting this delicate aspect of the subject. What he says here is of great practical value since it is "the truth for the times."

The fidelity of our brethren for three-quarters of a century to the New Testament basis of unity, has borne fruit. Many things do not continue as in the time of our fathers. We are face to face with the new aspects of union. This book is a sane, honest treatment of the subject with these new aspects in view. I like the book, both for its spirit and for the views set forth, and heartily commend it to the younger men of our ministry as well as the great host who are not preachers.

OUR SIMULTANEOUS CAMPAIGNS

St. Louis Campaign.

The special simultaneous effort in St. Louis was brought to a close Sunday before last, only four of the churches having held meetings during all of the week prior to that day. The total additions to eight churches actually engaged in the protracted meetings were 512, while this number would be swelled were we to include the additions at all the churches during the month of November. At no church did the meetings last over three weeks other than the extra Sunday. Several of the churches, such as Maplewood and Hammett Place, continued only two weeks, they being without the presence, during part of the meeting, of their regular pastors. At East St. Louis the resignation of the pastor was accepted during the meeting. Thus these places were somewhat handicapped by local conditions. Granite City did not begin until the other meetings were practically concluded and its remoteness makes it lose much of the effect of the benefit of the simultaneous effort. The reports of the different churches follow:

	By Confession.	Otherwise.	Total.
Granite City	5	18	23
Fourth	53	15	68
East St. Louis	7	11	18
Hammett Place	8	3	11
Hamilton Avenue	18	20	38
Union Avenue	41	40	81
Compton Heights	55	23	78
First	118	58	176
Maplewood	..	...	19
Totals	305	188	512

As to the value of the simultaneous campaign all the pastors are agreed.

L. W. McCreary, of Hamilton Avenue, where W. F. Turner and V. E. Ridenour helped him as evangelists, says: "These meetings have broadened our sympathies and deepened our love for the other churches of our own faith here in the city. We united our prayers for the one cause, in the various churches. We rejoiced in each other's successes. A victory for one was a victory for all, and thus the unity for which our Master prayed has been more perfectly established among all the churches of Christ in St. Louis."

James M. Philputt, of the Union Avenue Church, where C. M. Chilton and C. H. Altheide were the evangelists, says: "The church was thoroughly aroused and to hundreds of our members the Christian life will henceforth be a richer, broader and diviner thing because of the meetings. Brother Chilton's preaching was a revelation to us. A great soul back of the sermon is one of the secrets of his power. An exhaustive canvass of the neighborhood was made, yielding much good material. Brother Chilton and I made sixty calls on business men in their offices down town. Our congregation is now in fine shape to face the next great enterprise—the building of the auditorium."

John L. Brandt believes thoroughly in the simultaneous effort, so much so that he brought forward a motion requesting the state board to lay plans for a state-wide simultaneous campaign in Missouri. He says that the First Church has been strengthened not only in numbers but also financially and spiritually by Herbert Yeuell's efforts, which were ably seconded by a large body of personal workers in the church. Brother Brandt conducted the meeting after Brother Yeuell left, adding 25 more to the 151 won during the evangelist's presence.

F. N. Calvin, of Compton Heights, where W. E. Harlow was evangelist, feels that this effort in St. Louis was not really a fair test of the simultaneous meetings, which might develop much more momentum.

W. W. Dowling, senior elder of the Hammett Place Church, where C. C. Garrigues preached for two weeks, says that the meeting "quickened the spiritual pulse of the membership, inspired them with new courage and determination, and the church was so well pleased with the evangelist that he was called to the pastorate and will take up the work at an early date."

E. T. McFarland was the only pastor who held his own meeting and he regards the campaign as a great victory for our cause in North St. Louis. He lays the stress of the success in his own church on preparation and prayer. This was continued two months before the meetings began and Brother McFarland preached a series of four sermons on soul winning. He made a special feature of the music and used printers' ink to advertise.

The churches in St. Louis are not as vitally associated as are our churches in some other cities, but it is felt that this campaign has done a great deal towards cementing the bonds of fellowship. The Sunday afternoon meetings, while not as thronged as they ought to have been, were well attended and did much towards instructing some of the membership in our history and aims and making us feel the greatness of our brotherhood and of our plea.

The Indianapolis Campaign.

Four weeks of the simultaneous evangelistic campaign in Indianapolis have passed into history. While the campaign is by no means ended, five churches continuing special services at the date this report is made, it is far enough advanced to warrant an expression as to the value of the movement. We were inspired to a large degree by the Pittsburg campaign to undertake the work in this city. We rejoice greatly in our successes, but if our victory can stimulate and increase the spirit of evangelism throughout our great brotherhood, our joy will be multiplied.

The total additions reported up to Monday morning, November 26, were:

	By Confession.	Otherwise.	Total.
Central	65	118	183
Second	14	6	20
Third	263	166	429
Fourth	28	29	57
Downey Avenue	8	13	21
Sixth	51	79	130
Seventh	14	8	22
Bismarck Avenue	53	50	103
Hillside	32	17	49
Morris Street	66	34	100
Englewood	2	9	11
Olive Branch	14	11	25
North Park	42	39	81
West Park	19	43	62
Totals	671	622	1,293

It is only fair to say that Olive Branch was one week late in starting, Downey Avenue two weeks late, and that Englewood was unexpectedly left without a pastor a few weeks before the time of beginning. The following churches are continuing with increasing interest: Third, Downey Avenue, Bismarck Avenue, Olive Branch and West Park.

Considering the number of churches engaged, we believe that this is the most successful simultaneous campaign ever carried on among the Disciples.

It is of interest to know how the campaign is regarded by the pastors of our churches. The following statements show:

"The simultaneous campaign has been a blessing to our churches. It has put us all on our metal and the result has been not only a tide of additions to the churches, but an awakened church."—Allan B. Philputt.

"The simultaneous campaign has proven itself a success. It is a mighty engine in the hands of God and a consecrated and united church for the saving of souls. Praise the Lord."—C. B. Newnan.

"It has laid the foundation for future united work in Indianapolis. It has given every member of each congregation a feeling of participation in every meeting. It has brought more religion out of the trunks than any former movement."—C. E. Underwood.

"We have certainly had a great meeting. A great and good impression was made upon our city. We are a stronger people now."—A. L. Orcutt.

"I think our campaign has been a great success. A complete Gospel has been preached and heard by thousands that would never have been reached in one great union meeting."—D. R. Lucas.

"There are at least two advantages over the old plan of evangelistic meetings. It is a business like way of doing the Lord's work and calls the attention of the public to the church and its message. By the co-operation of the larger church and through the general religious awakening of the community the smaller congregations have opportunities for strengthening their forces which they otherwise could not have."—G. F. Powers.

"The campaign has demonstrated the value of united effort. It placed our cause before the Indianapolis public as never before."—C. A. Johnson.

"The campaign was helpful in every way. It aroused an evangelistic enthusiasm, compelled public attention, and contributed to the unification of our work in such a way as could not have been done otherwise."—Austin Hunter.

"The evangelistic campaign has been a great success. We came before the people of a great city as a united church. More attention has been given in our city papers. But all advertising should be under one committee. Practice in working together will solve many difficulties."—F. P. Smith.

J. M. Canfield was both pastor and evangelist at Olive Branch. He is a veteran. He has been in our city work for thirty-six years, having organized five of our fourteen churches. He says: "It is glorious, an unqualified success. I rejoice to have lived to see this day. The kindly feeling among the preachers is worth everything."

It would be almost miraculous if such a campaign were so conducted as to suit all, yet the spirit of criticism has been entirely absent. All have rejoiced in the victory of each church. The splendid spirit of unity among the ministers of the city has been deepened and strengthened. With fourteen churches and seven thousand or more members we are a great people and a force to be counted in this city.

Were we to begin the campaign over, I do not now see how we could make much improvement in our plans. Every committee did its work on time and well.

To me two features are especially gratifying. First, the marked success in the younger and smaller churches. I rejoice in the great meeting of the Third Church held in the Armory, under the leadership of Charles Reign Scoville, and commanding the attention of the whole city, but I rejoice also that it in no way interfered with the work in the other churches save to stimulate. One of the most remarkable of the meetings is that at Bismarck Avenue, conducted by three Butler College students as pastor, evangelist and singer, with 103 additions, and still continued with increased interest. Second, I rejoice in there having been not the slightest friction among the workers of the city, but on the contrary a growing feeling of love and confidence and unity.

Louisville Simultaneous Revivals.

The month of November marked a decided forward step for the cause in Louisville. Five churches were engaged in simultaneous revivals and 200 were added to the congregations interested. Another good result was that the Clifton church, for which T. S. Tinsley preaches, decided to become a living link in the home society, and Crescent Hill, a neighboring suburb, was chosen as the field of service. A Bible school has been organized and James T. McKissick is at present engaged in a very interesting revival fostered by the Clifton church, and the hope is to organize a congregation. The following is a tabulated report of the five revivals:

1. Broadway Church—W. N. Briney, minister; J. V. Coombs, evangelist. Seventy added. Church greatly pleased.

2. South Louisville Church—E. B. Richey, minister; W. J. Cocke, evangelist. Forty added. Our youngest church in a new house takes aggressive position among our sisterhood of churches. Church nearly out of debt.

3. Parkland Church—G. W. Nutter, minister; H. B. Bennett, evangelist. Forty-four added.

4. Third Church—D. F. Stafford, minister; H. D. C. MacLachlan, evangelist. Twenty-six added. Evangelist did a great work in reconciling church to the event of sale and removal to a better location.

5. Clifton Church—T. S. Tinsley, minister; J. J. Castlebury, evangelist. Thirty added; $1,500 church debt paid and congregation becomes a living link in the Home Society. Church very happy.

The Louisville churches and preachers like the simultaneous idea and next time we hope to accomplish more, since this was our first experience. We needed the prestige and co-operation of our great First Church. While Brother Powell was friendly to the movement his engagements were such as to prevent his participation. If there is any truth in the widely known adage: "As goes America so goes the world," there must be more certainty in its paraphrase, "As goes the great First Church of any city so goes the city." But we expect not to look in vain to our First Church for leadership.

Convention Committee.

The brethren at Norfolk, Va., held a meeting last week with a view to shaping the work of arrangement for our next international convention which is to be held there in October, 1907. The report of the nominating committee was accepted. J. T. T. Hundley, of Norfolk, was elected general chairman, and the following brethren chairmen of committees: Publicity, R. E. Steed; finance, J. F. East; pulpit supply, D. S. Henkel, of Newport News; reception, Dr. R. H. Walker; registration, J. H. Schlegel; program, Thomas N. Miranda; exhibits, C. N. Williams, of Hampton; halls, W. H. Phillips, of Port Norfolk; music, M. W. Mason; transportation, W. C. Humphreys; ushers, J. F. McGinnis; communion, W. R. Jennet, of Newport News; entertainment, J. G. Holladay; local excursions, B. B. Spicer.

The question of a Disciples' building at the Jamestown Exposition, similar to that of the St. Louis Exposition, was discussed. This matter was referred to a committee of five, appointed by the chairman, Messrs. M. W. Mason, Robert Burroughs, George A. Vaiden, R. E. Steed and J. F. East to act in conjunction with the general executive committee, with power to act and, if expedient, to form a stock corporation for the erection of said building, the idea being, if possible, to erect a structure that can be used for religious purposes after the close of the Exposition, and which will cost about $5,000.

The meeting adjourned to convene in Hampton the fourth Sunday in January.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Checking the Drifting at Burrton.

One of the best meetings held for several years has just been concluded at Burrton, Kan., by David Lyon. It seems that many of the young people were becoming skeptics, but Brother Lyon's sermons on evidences have strengthened the faith of all who heard and checked the drifting of many. The outlook for more additions to follow is good, for many think the meeting closed too soon. Burrton has been regarded as a hard place to hold a revival, but this meeting has shown that the Gospel ably presented has not lost its power. The Burrton Christian church is, in many respects, the best church in the town. At the reception given to the new members they were made to feel that they were in fellowship, and that they were to preach Christ by letting their light shine. Otto Shirley, the pastor, entered upon his second year's pastorate December 1 and feels the stronger for this meeting.

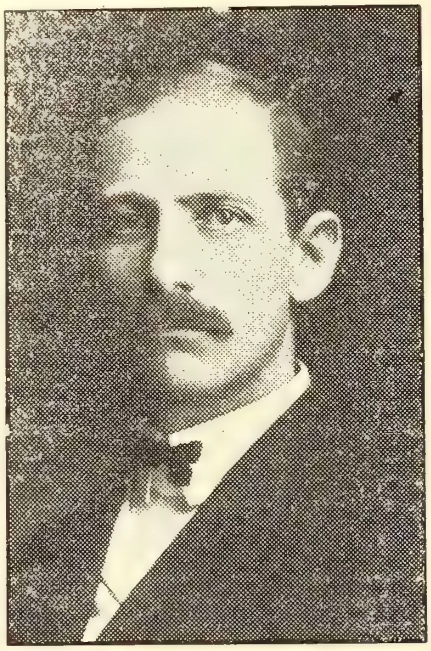
W. H. Pinkerton at Carthage, Mo.

The meeting which began at Carthage, Mo., November 18, is progressing nicely. W. H. Pinkerton and F. A. Cappa and wife, who are the evangelists, were delayed in their arrival by the storm. Pastor Newell L. Sims continued the meeting from Sunday and had ten additions up till the time of the arrival of the evangelists. Prospects are good for a fine meeting. A chorus of 100 voices is being organized and the city is being thoroughly canvassed and the meeting advertised everywhere.



W. H. Pinkerton.

The Meeting at Downs, Kan.

This meeting, led by H. E. Wilhite, closed with thirty-two additions. Considering the many things to contend with it is regarded as a very successful meeting. Brother Wilhite and his wife gained the love of all our workers and outsiders as well. Mrs. Wilhite conducted a Bible drill which was both helpful and instructive. During the last ten days Edgar Tuckerman, a graduate of Lincoln, Neb., led the song service and is now employed by Brother Wilhite. He left here to conduct a meeting at Forest Avenue, Kansas City. A reception was given to the evangelist and the new members in the home of Mr. T. M. Renfro.

The Broadway Christian Church, Sedalia, Mo.

A jubilee service was held at this church on November 2, in celebration of the raising of $2,100 to pay for the debt on the building. The mortgage has now been burned and, of course, the brethren are happy to be in a building free from all incumbrance. Erected during the pastorate of F. L. Cook, the cost of the building was about $8,000. Brother Cook is honored by the church as a man and for his faithful labors, and it was a cause of regret that he could not be with his former flock on this occasion. The city churches were invited and R. C. Miller, of the East Sedalia Baptist Church, and J. M. Rudy, of the First Christian Church, made helpful addresses. T. B. Young, chairman of the official board, gave a brief history of the church and Mrs. M. F. Kaler, president of the Aid Society, spoke of the material part the women had taken in assisting the church. During the past eight years they have averaged $60 a month and during the last year they have raised over $1,000. Surely such an Aid Society is worthy of the name.

A meeting has just been begun at this church. A. N. Lindsey, of Clinton, Mo., who is well known in the state and has been very successful in revival work, is to assist Brother Hamann. This effort is being entered upon in the spirit of prayer. Twenty cottage prayer-meetings were planned for last Wednesday evening before the opening of the meeting.

The Georgia Christian Missionary Convention.

The happiest, most harmonious and most enthusiastic state convention ever held by the churches of Christ in Georgia came to a close the night of November 22. Every address and speech and talk made during the convention was full of hope and harmony and progress. New zeal and new determination seemed to be in every heart and a new era is upon us in Georgia. Every preacher and every church in the state is ready for greater activity in the service of the Master. Valdosta, the beautiful city of 9,000 people, in which the convention was held, gave the convention delightful entertainment. The church and city were so much pleased with the convention that they asked to be allowed to entertain it again in 1907. The Georgia preachers present were: Howard T. Cree, president, Augusta; J. H. Wood, Augusta; H. King Pendleton, B. P. Smith, A. E. Seddon, E. L. Shelnutt, Atlanta; W. A. Chastain, Athens; P. H. Mears and S. S. Landrum, Winder; O. A. Moore, Texas; D. R. Piper, Watkinsville; T. G. Linkous, Sandersville; G. R. Cleveland, Wrightsville; J. A. Jenson, Tennille; A. B. Herring, R. I. Hinely, C. R. Miller, Lake Park; R. W. Simpson, Macon; R. W. Wallace, Valdosta; N. B. Buckley and A. B. Wade, Fitzgerald; W. B. Shaw, Baldwin. Visiting preachers were: A. McLean, Cincinnati; Dr. E. I. Osgood, missionary to China; George B. Ranshaw, Cincinnati; George W. Muckley, Kansas City; J. H. Mohorter, St. Louis; H. C. Bowen, Cincinnati; Sam J. White, Florida; Miss Mattie Pounds, Indianapolis. The convention regretted the absence of beloved J. S. Lamar, of Augusta; J. H. Hughes, of Macon, and J. H. Garrison, of St. Louis. These expected to be present but illness kept them away. They were tenderly remembered by the convention.

A brief outline of the proceedings is all I can give you here. The opening session of the convention was a missionary rally conducted by A. McLean and Dr. E. I. Osgood. It is useless to say that the large audience was simply electrified by these men upon the great theme so dear to their hearts. They made many deeper conversions to foreign missions. How can any one hear such men and such a theme and close his eyes, his heart and his pocketbook to the world's needs?

Brother McLean and Dr. Osgood were given one hour Tuesday morning and again they charmed the convention with their missionary addresses. Georgia believes that A. McLean is one of the greatest men in the world and his presence was a benediction. We want Brother McLean and Dr. Osgood to attend our state convention in 1907.

Tuesday morning, November 20, from 10:30 to 12:30 the Woman's Society for Georgia Missions held an interesting session, presided over by the president, Mrs. B. O. Miller, of Augusta. This society, which confines its work to Georgia, showed prosperity and bright prospects for the future.

The sessions of the afternoon and evening were given to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, with State President Mrs. B. P. Smith, of Atlanta, in the chair. This society reported the best year's work in its history. Miss Mattie Pounds, of Indianapolis, Ind., delivered two addresses and added much toward making these sessions very interesting, helpful and successful.

Wednesday morning the Georgia Christian Missionary Society held its first session, the popular president, Howard T. Cree, of Augusta, in the chair. The state board and corresponding secretary and treasurer made the best reports in the history of our work in Georgia and the convention was perfectly delighted over the reports and the fact that the society is out of debt and over $200 in the treasury. Georgia has adopted a new plan for state evangelization and it is working like a charm. The convention and visiting preachers were enthusiastic over the plan and no longer consider it an experiment.

From 11 to 12:30 George B. Ranshaw, of Cincinnati, field secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, and George W. Muckley, secretary of the Church Extension Society, addressed the convention on the work of "Home Missions" and "Church Extension." Both addresses were considered masterpieces. These men are in their right places and no state loves them more than Georgia.

The afternoon session was devoted to Christian Endeavor and Sunday-school work. Mrs. Charles Goodman, of the First Church, Atlanta, presided over the Endeavor session and W. H. Roper, of Macon, over the Sunday-school session. Both of these periods were very enthusiastic and helpful.

The evening address was delivered by the president, Howard T. Cree, of Augusta, and was one of the leading addresses of the convention. At the close of his address he called for pledges for state work and in a few minutes $1,500 were raised. The First Church, Atlanta, started the enthusiasm by pledging $300. Valdosta stepped in just behind and other churches and individuals followed with the above result. Such enthusiasm was never seen in a Georgia convention and everybody seemed happy. It was a fitting climax for the day.

Thursday, the last day, was another great day. "Our Country Churches, Their Importance, Their Needs, Their Officers, Their Preachers," were ably discussed by D. R. Piper, of Watkinsville; John H. Wood, Augusta; A. B. Wade, Fitzgerald, and O. A. Moore, Texas. These were followed by J. H. Mohorter, of St. Louis, who delivered the most touching address of the convention on "Benevolence." This was Brother Mohorter's first visit to Georgia and I must say he took possession. We could not resist. I wish these visiting brethren could know how much they helped us in our convention and how much we appreciated them and their help. But we will try to show them in December, in March, in May and in September.

Just at the close of the morning session a telegram of Christian courtesy was received from the Georgia state Baptist convention in session at Cartersville. This courtesy was gracefully accepted and acknowledged. This was the first time that fraternal greetings have been exchanged in Georgia between these two bodies in convention and such greetings indicate warmer feelings and closer relations between these bodies so closely allied.

About the same time a telegram was received from Dr. G. A. Nunnally, of La Grange, Ga., requesting the co-operation of the convention in the prohibition movement in Georgia. Such a resolution was adopted by the convention.

The afternoon session was devoted to the work in our cities in Georgia and to the work of the Georgia Education Society. Addresses and talks were made by Cree, Pendleton, Wood, who presided over the session of the education society, Chastain, Shelnutt, Linkous and Seddon.

At the evening session talks were made by W. B. Shaw, of Baldwin; J. H. Mohorter, of St. Louis, and J. H. Wood, of Augusta. Offerings were taken for the Orphanage at Baldwin and for the Georgia Christian Education Society. Then followed a great address by G. B. Ranshaw, on "Christian Union."

Quite a number of minute talks were then made by delegates and visitors, including Methodists and Baptists, and the happy convention closed.

Much praise is due Brother R. W. Wallace, pastor of the splendid church in Valdosta, for the success of the convention. The delegates were delighted with Valdosta, the entertainment, the people and the climate and went away with happy recollections of the same.

The next convention goes to the First Church, Atlanta.

For the benefit of Georgia readers I want to say in conclusion that one surprising feature of the convention was the report of the committee on nominations, which was as follows: "In view of the fact that the present plan of work was inaugurated by the existing state board and that the members of this board are perfectly familiar with the conditions and needs of the field, we recommend the re-election of the officers and members without change." PECK-WILLIAMSON UNDERFEED FURNACE

Saves 1-2 to 2-3 on Coal Bills

EVERYBODY is dee-lighted with it because it is the only furnace that saves money. In the Underfeed the fire burns at the top. Coal is replenished from below. Smoke and gases must pass thro the flame. Waste in Topfeeds is fuel in the Underfeed, which gets as much heat out of cheapest coal as highest grade anthracite will yield. You save the difference in cost. The Underfeed pays for itself and then goes to work for you.

E. L. Williams, of Belknap, Ills., wrote last Spring: "I have a 12-room house and have gone through the Winter with 14 tons of slack coal, costing $1.00 per ton to put it in my basement. This is very cheap heating. I can recommend the UNDERFEED furnace to any one."

Illustration shows furnace without casing, cut out to show how coal is forced up under fire. Our Underfeed booklet fully illustrates and describes it. We'll not only send it to you, with dozens of fac-simile letters from people who KNOW, but offer you heating plans and the services of our Engineering Department—FREE. Write to-day—giving name of local dealer with whom you prefer to deal.

Southern California and Arizona Items.

For some time our missionary society has had under contemplation the matter of undertaking the work among the colored people in Los Angeles. E. F. Henderson, a well known colored preacher, formerly of Missouri, has been employed as an evangelist to labor among his people. Headquarters have been found on what is known as the Furlong Tract in Los Angeles, on the Long Beach line. This is a community of about 100 families with practically no convenient church privileges. Here a lot has been bought and a chapel will be erected. The evangelizing board desires to commend this work to the favorable consideration of the brethren in all the churches. Brother Henderson will, from time to time, be visiting the churches in the interest of this project. We hope he will be cordially received everywhere. His business is to solicit funds which will be turned over to a committee to be expended in this work. The standing committee to have charge of this is composed of Charles Goodwin, W. J. A. Smith, and Grant K. Lewis.——Leander Lane, of La Canada, recently held a short meeting at Hemet with good results.——J. W. Utter, who, for years has been the efficient minister of the church at Covina, has been called by the Broadway Church, Los Angeles, to assist Brother B. F. Coulter in the ministry of that great and growing congregation. He has already entered upon his duties.——W. G. Conley has resigned at Redlands and has already entered upon his work as pastor at Covina.——An open door is set before us in the seaside town of Redondo. Acting under instructions from our board, Eugene Burr, of Santa Monica, has begun a meeting which it is confidently expected, will result in the organization of a church.——Something like six months ago Mrs. Woolery, the state C. W. B. M. organizer, visited the Needles and organized an auxiliary. This was at the solicitation of a few faithful women who lived in this isolated city where we have no church. Now comes a call from this same devoted band for an evangelist that a meeting be held and a church organized. The secretary is under instructions to visit this place at an early date and see that their wishes are carried out. This reminds us of similar results attending an apostolic visit to a place by the river side where women were wont to gather for prayer. God be praised for faithful women.——Madison A. Hart's work at Pomona prospers greatly. He read a splendid paper before the ministerial association last Monday on "The Training a Child Should Receive in the Sunday-school."——Jesse P. McKnight, the highly esteemed minister of Magnolia Avenue Church, Los Angeles, has been very ill for a few weeks. He is now recuperating and hopes are entertained that he may soon be able to be heard from his pulpit again. His work has been supplied by C. C. Bentley and Frank G. Tyrrell.——At the magnificent property of the First Church, some account of which has appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, last Lord's day a special Sunday-school service brought the attendance at the Sunday-school hour to above 450. We congratulate Pastor Smither upon the success of this largest and latest venture of this great church.——J. F. Sloan, who recently returned to the coast from Kansas, now serves the church at Sawtelle, the seat of Southern California's Old Soldiers' Home. He resides at Willowbrook.——Things are moving harmoniously and enthusiastically with the church at Pasadena. Here F. M. Dowling, assisted by Edgar C. Riley, is leading the church in a $50,000 building propositon. This is a great enterprise but the leaders and hosts in the "crown of the valley" are equal to the task.——A good natured rivalry is about to begin between the Long Beach church and that of Magnolia Avenue, Los Angeles. It is in the nature of a contest in Sunday-school work. The average attendance of each is about 300.——The mother instinct of babies shows itself in their love for dolls. This is how it came that our baby church in Los Angeles presided over by the energetic E. H. Kellar, is founding a mission Sunday-school. The city's growth has proceeded in a southward course far beyond the neighborhood of the South Main Street Church. A lot has been selected in a new community where we already have about eighteen families. As soon as a chapel can be built the school will be organized.——At the August convention a simultaneous campaign in Southern California was postponed from the spring until the fall of 1907. The exact date to be fixed by the executive committee. At a recent meeting of this committee it was decided to fix the date for the last Sunday in October. Grant K. Lewis was made chairman of a committee on evangelists and instructed to take up the correspondence with both churches and evangelists that preparations may be forwarded.——A. E. Cory, missionary from China, was to address a rally of all our churches of Greater Los Angeles at Magnolia Avenue Church on November 18.——W. T. Adams, of Washington, is winning his way into the hearts of the people at Corona and Arlington. Great interest is manifested already in the beginning of his vigorous work.——Oscar Sweeney and wife were among the new faces greeted at our preachers' meeting this month. They were given a royal reception by the Rialto church the day after their arrival. This little band of Disciples are aglow with enthusiasm over their work. Brother and Sister Sweeney will also care for the church at Coltan. H. Elliott Ward did splendid missionary service by holding the fort at these points the latter part of the summer.——The evangelizing board at its recent meeting decided to push vigorously the matter of Arizona missions. The secretary is under instructions to visit our Arizona churches and secure their advice and co-operation in the matter of evangelizing new fields. Among the growing communities which present great opportunities are Tucson, Prescott, Globe, San Carlos and a score of other towns of smaller magnitude. So the work presses upon us from every side. Let the prayers of a great brotherhood be for the spirit of understanding and wisdom and consecration to rest upon our workers everywhere.

The Alabama Convention.

The greatest convention in the history of the brotherhood in the state is a thing of the past, closing yesterday at noon.

There were more than a hundred visitors from all portions of the state, representing about forty organized congregations that are in sympathy with our missionary work. The program, formerly published, was closely followed, and there were but few absentees. J. A. Lord, W. R. Warren and Mrs. Grant did not come. Mrs. Moses' place was filled by Miss Mattie Pounds, and the presence of Dr. E. I. Osgood, missionary to China; James C. Coggans, of Black Mountain, N. C., and H. C. Bowen, of "The Christian Weekly," Cincinnati, were agreeable surprises to all of us.

Great sermons and addresses were delivered by W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo.; J. H. Garrison, of St. Louis; A. McLean, of Cincinnati; George W. Muckley, of Kansas City; Miss Mattie Pounds, of Indianapolis; George B. Ranshaw, of Cincinnati; Dr. E. I. Osgood, of China; J. C. Coggins, of North Carolina; H. C. Bowen, of Cincinnati; Allen R. Moore, of Birmingham; J. C. Caldwell, of Selma; G. F. Cuthrel, of Oxford; J. R. McWane, of Birmingham; J. H. Hill, of Landersville; Belt White, of Anniston; J. H. Mohorter, of St. Louis; H. Galt Braxton, of Birmingham; Thomas Lenox, of Athens, L. O. Herrold, of Jasper; J. B. Woodin, of Greenville; H. G. Sedinger, of Athens; B. F. Stiff, of Blocton; D. P. Taylor, of Bessemer; Dr. E. C. Anderson, of Anniston, and Claude E. Hill, of Mobile.

The new state bord is composed of Allen R. Moore, president; J. C. Caldwell, vice-president; E. C. Anderson, corresponding secretary and treasurer; D. P. Taylor, recording secretary; E. E. Linthicum, J. M. Cranford, H. G. Braxton, A. A. Oden and J. W. Henry.

Eighteen hundred dollars, including the $400 appropriated by the home board at Cincinnati, were raised for state missions for the ensuing year. This will be increased during the year to practically $2,500 by new subscriptions.

S. P. Spiegel, of Birmingham, was unanimously chosen state evangelist for the coming year, and many of the struggling congregations in destitute fields were aided by small appropriations. The prospects are very flattering indeed for a great year's work.

The initiatory steps were taken to establish a Bible school at Selma under the leadership of Jesse C. Caldwell, for the purpose of preparing young men for the ministry in Alabama at the least possible cost.

Our nonco-operating brethren are coming into this work, as fast as they understand it, and we were glad to welcome one or two able ministers, who attended a convention for the first time, and were thoroughly converted to state missions and all other missionary work, by what they heard and saw.

Jasper, Ala., where, under the efficient leadership of L. O. Herrold, they are completing an elegant new church, was chosen as the place for the twenty-second convention.

The committee on obituaries reported the deaths of twenty of our membership throughout the state. The other committees made appropriate reports and at noon Monday, after a splendid address on "The Holy Spirit," by Dr. J. H. Garrison, "God Be With You" was sung and the convention adjourned. J. W. Henry.

Kokendoffer at Hannibal.

A two weeks' meeting has just concluded at Hannibal, conducted by A. W. Kokendoffer, of Mexico. There were thirty-one accessions, twenty-two of these by confession. Levi Marshall, during whose pastorate at Hannibal there have been 937 accessions, writes that Brother Kokendoffer "has an evangelistic temperament and should be in the field all the time. He spoke with great spiritual power from a well-stored mind and consecrated heart." The "Hannibal Journal" gave considerable space to the meeting, and at no service during the June convention was the house more densely packed than on the concluding Sunday night. Of the thirty-one additions twenty were men and boys. Brother Marshall is, of course, a princely fellow and greatly beloved by all the Hannibal people.

Cincinnati Letter.

Scoville, Smith and Kendall were in Cincinnati November 19, for a rally in the interest of an evangelistic campaign to be held next year. The brotherhood in the vicinity was well represented. Music Hall, the largest auditorium in the city, is the place selected. Cincinnati, as well as the whole brotherhood, will look forward to this meeting.——Good meetings have been held recently at Richmond Street, Norwood, Dayton, Ky., Lockland, Lawrenceburg, Ind., and at Central, with Pinkerton and Saxton leading. These meetings all resulted in about 125 additions. Latonia, Ky., came in about the time these closed and at last report had had twenty-five additions. P. H. Duncan is doing the preaching. S. Boyd White is being assisted in a good meeting now at Mt. Healthy by J. W. Hagin, of Covington.——We are sorry to lose George A. Miller, who has been for nearly thirteen years at Fifth Street, Covington. He goes to Washington to take up a great work and we wish him a happy and fruitful ministry there. Bro. Milo Atkinson, of Marion, Ind., who has been chosen to succeed him, is no stranger in our city and his return to us on January, 1907, will be the renewing of sweet fellowship.——The congregation at Camp Washington hopes to be in its new house in the near future.——The Central Church is enjoying splendid growth in numbers, and in the audiences at the Sunday services. A Church "Absorbing" the Community.

For four years J. N. McConnell held a meeting at Pleasant Hill, Ore., with the result that forty-four were added to the church, twenty-eight of these being by confession. Many thought that nearly everybody in this community belonged to the church, for Pleasant Hill is one of the best moral and religious communities I have found. The people stand up for the neighborhood and the church with the result that Pleasant Hill is known far and wide as a sociable and religious neighborhood. There is one church only—the Christian church, and when any one moves into the community the church immediately begins to absorb that one, and in a short time if he is at all "absorbable" the process of making a Christian only is completed. It is a pleasure and joy to work with such a body of believers. We were sorry to see Brother McConnell go, but he had another meeting to hold at Aumsville.

Indian Territory.

The summer is ended, the harvest is passed, the election is over. Crops have been abundant, all lines of commercialism pushing, and the weather ideal. Five circuses have been doing the territory, and minor attractions innumerable. We have held more revivals thus far during the autumn than were ever held by our people, I presume, during any autumn, and with less satisfactory results. The evil effects of political campaigns are already felt in the new state. R. E. Rosenstine succeeded in constituting a congregation at Ember, also one at Tuttle, and is now in a meeting at Sulphur.——George A. Wolf gathered in about 30 into the fold at Hartshorne. He is now at Haileyville. He baptized 25 Sunday afternoon, had three more confessions Sunday night, with others to follow. He goes to Dow next, thence to Poteau.——Brothers Wolf and Rosenstine are regular evangelists at this time in the employ of the Indian Territory Missionary Co-operation.——About ten other meetings have been held under the auspices of our co-operation with more or less success—more generally less.——D. N. Manley, of New York, goes to Okmulgee, G. N. Guest to Ada, J. W. Hilderbrandt to Wealaka, J. S. Crouch to Pauls Valley and Lindsay.—J. T. Hawkins, Cor. Sec.

An Interesting Company.

We had the pleasure of a most interesting company at the Durham habitat in California a few days ago. One of our guests was Sister Eliza Swift Saxe, born in Bowling Green, Mo., in 1827, who came to California in 1862 by overland caravan. Her mother was one Margaret Campbell, a daughter of William Campbell, a younger brother of Alexander Campbell. This makes a relationship to that great family that is worthy of mention and a pride to any family ancestral history. Although our sister is in her eightieth year her mind is active and she is a great reader and thinker. She has reared a family of thirteen and of these four sons and one daughter are still living. Her brother, Hon. John Swift, was minister to Japan under President Harrison, and died in Tokio.

Another of our guests was Sister Sue E. Jones Grant, of Woodland, Cal. Sister Grant's name is a household word in California, because of her great activity in the Christian women's work in our state. The Grant family came to California in 1875. Professor Grant was associated with President B. H. Smith in college work in Canton, Mo., for many years and for a number of years was in Hesperian College, California. But one of the most interesting features of Sister Grant's historic life is that she is the founder of Eureka College, Ill. It was in 1847, as a young teacher, that she opened a young ladies' select school with seventeen puipls in the little village of Walnut Grove. Returning to Jacksonville the next year to complete her course of study Brothers Lindsey and Fisher returned from Bethany and opened a mixed school called "Walnut Grove Academy," and after a time they named the place Eureka. Since the war our alma mater, Abingdon College, was combined with Eureka, which has adopted our alumni. Sister Grant afterward was associated with Professor Williams in founding Columbia (Mo.) Female College, now Christian College, and one of the best schools in the United States. It was a pleasure to scatter flowers in the pathway of these worthy historic women.

Other important guests were Brother and Sister J. H. McCullough, who came to California in 1877. He was one of the founders of the "Christian Standard." Brother McCullough is now the oldest of our preachers who is actively engaged in the ministry in California. He is now "holding the fort" for the united churches in San Jose, till their minister arrives from Indiana.

MRS. SUE E. GRANT,
Associated in the Founding of Eureka and Christian Colleges.

While Brother McCullough is the oldest preacher he has not been preaching in California as long as the writer of these lines, for the Durhams came out in 1871.

DEDICATIONS.

Shiloh, Anderson County, Ky.

A new church building was recently dedicated here, all the necessary money to clear off the debt being raised with a fair balance on hand for new pews. I was assisted by the regular minister, D. W. Case, of Lexington, Ky. This dedication is part of the work of our Lawrenceburg church toward our Centennial aims. We have helped another church in the county with a meeting and two others by Sunday afternoon preaching, and our own work is much strengthened thereby.

Walter C. Gibbs.

Jacksonville, Ill.

The dedicatory exercises of the Second Christian Church were carried out in the auditorium and not on the lawn as had been proposed. The auditorium was not large enough to accommodate all who wanted to attend and every foot of standing room was occupied. The Third Christian Church, of Bloomington, sent its choir to assist the local one. Evangelist R. A. Whittington read the Scriptures. The opening prayer was made by John W. Kirk. E. M. Harlis made some pastoral remarks and J. H. O. Smith preached the sermon. After a talk by Russell F. Thrapp the collection was taken, which amounted to $278, though since then it has been increased to over $300.

Salem, Ill.

The corner stone of the new Christian church at Salem, the birthplace of Hon. William Jennings Bryan, was laid on November 11. The exercises were under the direction of Elder F. O. Fannon, who has charge of the work at Salem. The edifice is to be a handsome structure, constructed of pressed brick with stone trimmings, and will cost when completed from $20,000 to $25,000. Senator Charles E. Hull, chairman of the building committee, stated that all financial obligations had been met to date. Elder John A. Williams, the first pastor of the Salem congregation, and who is in his 87th year, was the guest of honor. He delivered a reminiscent address relating incidents about the pioneer work of the Christian church in this, Marion county, which has sixteen active congregations at the present time. The Christian church is forging rapidly to the front in this section. There are 25,000 Disciples of Christ in Southern Illinois. New churches are being built while a number are contemplating erecting new buildings in the near future. A new church was recently erected at Carmi. Kimmundy will either build a new house or an addition in the near future. Mt. Carmel is about to decide in favor of erecting a new church house, while Centralia is contemplating the erection of a $20,000 edifice. J. F. Rosborough, pastor of the Centralia church, is president of the seventh district of southern Illinois, which includes twenty-two counties. R. H. Robertson, of DuQuoin, is president of the eighth district, which includes the remaining fourteen counties of southern Illinois, which are located in the extreme southern portion of the state. A good and effective work is being accomplished throughout both districts.

THE NEW TEXAS-CALIFORNIA.—The Gulf Coast and Rio Grande Valley of exas is the most attractive region known to us for both the Home-Seeker and the Investor. It is the home of the Citrus fruits, English walnuts, Figs and Grapes. The truck-farmer puts his products on the market from four to six weeks earlier than from any other portion of the country. He is 1500 miles nearer to the great markets than California. Our organization is especially trying to interest members of the Christian Church, so that the settler will have the advantage of his accustomed religious influence. Colds on the Chest

Ask your doctor the medical name for a cold on the chest. He will say, "Bronchitis." Ask him if it is ever serious. Lastly, ask him if he prescribes Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for this disease. Keep in close touch with your family physician, and follow his advice carefully.

We have no secrets! We publish the formulas of all our preparations.

Washington.

Waterville, Nov. 21.—The meeting at Ritzville was a pronounced success; not because of the large ingathering, but because of a spiritual development. The meeting at Pomeroy closed at the end of one week with four accessions to the church. Meeting here is three nights old. Attendance far exceeding our expectations. One addition the first night. Go next to Entiat.—O. M. Thomason, evangelist.

What Truth Has Chiefly Appealed to You from the Year's Bible School Lessons?—Matt. 13:52; Is. 52:13-15; 53:1-12.

The story of the crucifixion is not more a revelation of human and satanic malignity than it is of divine love.

The five thousand were fed not because the lad gave a great deal to the Lord, but because one in Israel had given his all to the Master. Our own unloading of ourselves of material things may enable us to feed even greater hosts on the Bread of Life.

Aside from their scriptural associations there is little attractiveness in the fishers' or shepherds' employ. They are invested with sacred romance to-day because engaged in by holy prophets and apostles and their relation to our Savior. In like manner we may ennoble the humblest tasks and positions if we nobly fulfill them. We may thus remove the stigma from occupations within which men may enter and achieve careers of splendid usefulness.

Peter was not a perfect man when he said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," but he was facing in the right direction, and when close to the Master had the courage of his convictions. Under Christ's patronage he was on earth invested with the halo of martyrdom and is glorious in the heavens. Nor should men delay their public confession till they shall have attained perfection. Perfection is found only in Heaven, and on earth is not even approached outside the church.

1906, with its Bible school lessons, is like a golden cord strung with 52 beautiful gems on whose every facet is printed instruction in righteousness and life more precious than weighty gold or rarest stone. Let us hold these up to each other's admiration and scrutinize them closely for their innermost meaning. While we search for their spiritual significance, let us not yield to that tendency to "spiritualize away" their application to the practical affairs of this workaday world. They are intended for modern sinners as well as ancient Pilates, and the saints of to-day as well as the gentle Marys of old.

Were the rich young ruler living to-day, he would be one of the most exemplary young men in any city on earth; but until he had surrendered all and was following Jesus in the way the Master would still lovingly say, "One thing thou lackest." Perhaps none will ever on earth reach that stage where Jesus would not helpfully call attention to some lack in character. We will suppose he would each time name the most conspicuous defect. It is well we ask, "And what would mine be at the first?" In these closing days let us each overcome some present lack in the development of symmetrical Christian character.

In the few lessons from which specially helpful truths are to be recalled this evening, we must not forget the mountain of transfiguration. Peter, James and John were taken with the Savior. Andrew naturally belonged with this division of the Apostles, and yet here and on other special occasions he was excluded from special privilege because, apparently, he fell just a little short of the requirements of being a witness to the resurrection of the ruler's daughter and of Christ's transfiguration glory. Doubtless, too, if we would grow just a little in grace, practice a denial of the flesh and an exaltation of spirit entirely within the range of our possiblities, we would enjoy many incomparably sweet and heavenly experiences, from which we are now excluded through lack of preparation.

Jesus Risen from the Dead.—Matt. 28:1-15.

Memory verses, 5, 6.

Golden Text.—He is risen, as he said. —Matt. 28:6.

It has often been remarked that the four accounts of the Resurrection, as found in the four gospels, not only differ in their report of the details of that event, but differ perhaps irreconcilably in some of the details. It is hard to say with any certainty that two statements are irreconcilable for the ingenuity of exegetes in harmonizing the apparently inharmonious is infinite.

To us it appears the most reasonable thing in the world that there should be variations in the report of the details of so marvelous an event. Did the angel roll away the stone before the women came (as Mark seems to say) or after their arrival and in their presence (as Matthew's account would lead one to imagine)? Were there "two men in dazzling apparel" standing in the tomb (Luke), or one sitting inside the tomb (Mark), or one sitting on the stone at the entrance (Matt.)? Who knows? Who cares, except as a matter of curious interest? The evangelists do not claim to have been witnesses of these first incidents of the resurrection. They got their information from the women. It is obvious that persons in a state of profound emotional excitement, as the women must have been, would not have been the best qualified to give a coldly accurate narrative of the details of such an event, though they were admirably qualified to report the scene in its general character and significance.

In regard to the Resurrection, therefore, as in regard to the Crucifixion, the variations of the different accounts are a confirmation of their substantial truth. The early defenders of Christianity considered the resurrection of Jesus as the most vital and essential of the gospel facts. Forgers would have taken good care to secure perfect agreement between their accounts of this event.

The Resurrection was the greatest but the most probable of the miracles of Jesus. Even thoughtful skeptics do not deny the possibility of the miraculous. If then, one admits the existence of a God by whose power miracles can be done, the acceptance of any particular alleged miracle as historically true will depend upon the evidence and the evidence must be judged, partly at least, in the light of the motive.

Mr. Huxley said that no conceivable evidence would make him believe that "a centaur had been seen trotting down Regent street." True enough, for such a marvel would have no meaning and value. It is the spiritual worth of the miracles of Jesus which gives them probability. This is pre-eminently true of the Resurrection. Granted that there is a God who can perform the miraculous, is any miracle more probable than the resurrection of such a person as Jesus. Considering the value which that event has had in the lives of men, and which it will continue to have—a value which was known in advance to the infinite wisdom—could any miracle be backed by a stronger motive? Does not such a miracle then have such an inherent probability that it commands belief much more readily than would such a miracle as, for example, Huxley's "Centaur on Regent Street"?

The evidence for the resurrection is strengthened by the fact that the witnesses to it devotedly gave their lives and cheerfully met their deaths in defence of their testimony. Somehow, the disciples, who had believed at the time of the crucifixion that their master's mission was ended forever, gained a deep conviction that their Lord was alive again and would live on high forever. They proved the sincerity of their belief by dying for it. The fact that all early Christianity was based upon a belief in the resurrection is the strongest evidence of it as a fact of history.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Costs Nothing to Try.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purposes.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but, on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

The Service of Song.—Col. 3:16.

"To our Redeemer's glorious name
  Awake a sacred song;
Oh, may his love—immortal flame—
  Tune every heart and tongue!

"Oh, may the sweet, the blissful theme,
  Fill every heart and tongue,
Till strangers love thy charming name,
  And join the sacred song!"

One can not but protest against the tendency in modern nurseries and kindergartens to freight the memories of children with meaningless musical jingles instead of the sweet, trustful, solemn, and majestic "Rock of Ages," "Nearer My God to Thee," "Lead, Kindly Light," and similar sacred triumphs of our hymnology. A heart and memory thoroughly saturated with the tunes, words and sentiments of such songs are a priceless possession.

The emotions find expression in poetry as naturally as wants or reason do in prose, and when given voice they take the voice of song. Through the emotions we get the truest revelations of character. Thus in the songs we sing and the way we sing the world learns us as we are. But the peculiar ministry of song is not only to reveal, but also to form character. It is well then we be more concerned about the songs we sing than about the food we eat, the company we keep, the very air we breathe.

Such influence has song over life and character that a celebrated statesman once remarked: "Let me select the ballads of a people and I care not who writes their laws." This statement should at least suggest to teachers the propriety of expurgating from school songs all sentiments pitched to a low idealism, and to parents to eliminate from hearthstone music every chord inconsistent with ideals of noblest worth, and to preachers to banish from the sanctuary every song with bars discordant with "the form of sound words."

The psalmist laments that as the people were going into captivity and had hanged up their harps on the willows, their captors required one of the songs of Zion, but "How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?" It would have been infinitely better for them had they sung. Nothing will do more to relieve the tense emotions, to make normal the suppressed heart, to clear the range of vision all the way up to God, and change defeat into victory than the new faith, courage, and hope that always accompany the singing of the songs of Zion.

No other part of the worship will more richly repay careful preparation than will the song service. Often the impression is given that time is allowed for a song not so much for adoration as to occupy the hour. Again the selection is so little in harmony with the prevailing sentiments of the meeting or the spirit that ought to prevail there that music is permitted to render but a tithe of its natural helpfulness. Lack of discrimination is exhibited in persistently choosing the cheap and tawdry "sunshine and dewdrop" verses that creep into our books to the exclusion of the deeper and more dignified and majestic hymns that voice the greatest deeps of the heart and loftiest aspirations of the soul. Let us not neglect the great battle and martyr songs, those that celebrate new-born peace and hope, a faith emergent and triumphant, nor those that in the profound language of God enshrine a spirit that makes the singer like unto him.

The scientist will reason from the wing and fin and the air and water that match them, from the hunger and the food that satisfies it up to the God whose designing intelligence and love they prove. Job's confidence is based on a yet more immediate and vivid consciousness. He sings,

"None saith, where is God my maker,
  Who giveth songs in the night."

He who has supplied us with power to sing those songs in the night time of sickness and sorrow, of impending disaster and gloom, that assuage grief, restore faith and courage, and inspire us with hope for the morrow, has revealed a personal and paternal love more discerning and precious even than that manifested in providing the atmosphere for wings, rivers for fins, or bread for hunger.

People's Forum

Concerning "Trial Marriages."

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

In regard to a recent publication containing the suggestion of "trial marriages," with the privilege of breaking them off at will and marrying some one else, etc.—in other words, to stay married as long as one pleased, and then whenever one changed one's mind, to "marry" some one else; permit me to say, that this is precisely the system that was practised until recently, in one (or more) of the islands of the Pacific. A lady of delicate sensibilities, in trying to convey this condition of affairs to her readers, thus described it in her book. She had been some time on the island, learning the language, she said, before she became aware of the peculiar social conditions there; and the way she learned of them was this. She noticed the young son of the chief called several women "Mother." Inquiring of him why he called more than one by that name, he replied, that this one was his mother this year; that one was his mother last year; and still others had been his mother in previous years; and therefore, to avoid mistakes, he called all women "Mother."

This condition has however, I believe, through the missionaries and the introduction of Christianity, all been changed, until they now have permanent wives.

But we see that this supposedly novel advance in civilization has been practiced for ages by the pagans of the Pacific, and, if I am not mistaken, has been finally abandoned by them.

Mormonism is the taking of several permanent wives; and this most of Christendom reprehends and deplores. But trial marriages would be the taking of several temporary wives, and therefore be worse than mormonism. And as no length of time is prescribed for trial marriages, and as they are only to last until the parties or one of them changes their mind, they might change from day to day. This is about as the brute creation lives. But who before ever held the brute up as a model? Certainly the proposer of "trial marriages" is unique in the choice of ideals and progress!

There are just three questions I would like to ask the proposer:

1st. How can "trial marriages" be reconciled with Christ's command (Matt. 19:6) "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder," (save for the single cause which He Himself mentioned in Matt. 5:32)?

2nd. And how can they be reconciled with God's command (Ex. 20:14), "Thou shalt not commit adultery," in the light of what Christ said in Matt. 5:32, "But I say unto you, that everyone that putteth away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, maketh her an adultress, and whosoever shall marry her when she is put away, committeth adultery?"

3rd. And finally, if one continually teaches or makes one's habit of life directly contrary to Christ's express commands, how can such a one be a Christian or expect heaven?

New York. J. B. M.

[The proposal of "Trial Marriages," by Elsie Clews Parsons is so manifestly barbarian and contrary to Christ's teaching and the experience of the world's civilization that it merits universal condemnation. EDITOR.]

A Brotherhood.

preciate them none the less, but we love or should love the men the more, on whose shoulders rest the battle and heat of the day. Do not be particular about the form of organization. Twelve hundred delegates of the Presbyterian church met recently in Indianapolis to organize a brotherhood. But when they got on the mountain top of spiritual enthusiasm the delegates were told to go home with the life generated and let it work itself out. They would not deaden that splendid feeling with "whereases" and by-laws. "Go home," was the cry, "and let the life take its own form." They did what their fathers ought to have done two and a half centuries before—kept their profane hands off. One who was there went over to the Illinois delegation after the convention was over and heard a gray-haired man addressing a group as follows: "Men, I am going home to do better work for the Christ than ever before. All who will join with me in this determination, will you raise your hand," and every hand went up. "Then," he said, "draw your sword," and every hand went down to the imaginary sheath and drew the sword and extended it on high. Shall not we, who stand only, for the Christ draw our swords and do valiant work for him who is mightly and able to save to the utmost all who come unto him?

MAN'S FAREWELL TO LOW WAGES

GOOD-BY FOREVER TO HARD WORK—LITTLE PAY—HARD TIMES—JOB HUNTING! YOU CAN OWN AND BOSS THIS MONEY-MAKING BUSINESS! GET MONEY AS THIS MAN DID!

CHANGE FROM WAGE EARNER TO WAGE PAYER--FROM SERVING OTHERS TO COMMANDING OTHERS

As it Would be Told at Home.

You may well rejoice, my wife, over our good fortune in getting for almost nothing a business which made money the very first day and has grown better all along until now after a few weeks the daily profits run from $8.00 to $12.00. You have just counted today's receipts and seem surprised that they amount to $15.00 plus some cents, but I have good reason to expect even larger returns as time goes on, Of that $15.00 you must take out about $3.00 for cost of material and the $12.00 remaining is profit. So business gets better as it gets older. I need have no worry about the future, because there remains many dollars' worth of unfinished work upon which I can calculate as in the past about 75c profit on the dollar and more orders coming in all the time. My trouble has not been the want of orders, but facilities to fill orders as fast as my many customers would like, and to make matters better have engaged a boy to help in the shop, including an extra solicitor.

It has kept me hustling this far to take care of family customers whose orders range from $2.00 to $10.00, but increased facilities will enable me to get business in even larger quantities from hotels, restaurants and public institutions, manufacturers and retail stores, there being scarcely any person in business or out who does not at all times have urgent need for my services. I never thought it possible to like this with only a few dollars, for almost every business worth having requires several thousand dollars to begin with, and I was not in that class, in fact, we can both recall with sad regret the days of no work- no wages—debts piling up—nearly everyone and everything combined to keep me down. Then my siege of sickness—no work—laid up—laid off—almost laid away—nothing coming in—expenses going on—doctor bills and what not. Trouble, trouble, trouble, but that's the common hardship of every man who sells his time to others—hard work—long hours—little pay—enriching those who boss, but never himself. Verily, my good wife, we know from experience that it's mighty inconvenient to be poor, and now after years of hard labor here and there and almost everywhere—from factory hand to office clerk—teaching school or selling goods—town and city trades—now and then the farm—we find ourselves in prosperous circumstances, owning a pleasant business which promises to pay from $1800 TO $2500 ANNUALLY.

Goodness knows, we might still be slaving for a bare existence if this opportunity hadn't come as a God-send, but we know too well the need of money to get foolish or spoiled by sudden prosperity. I am happy to think that our days of self-denial and privations are over, that you and the children can have many things in the future which you craved but alas! didn't have the money to buy. You can dress better, visit more, work less, buy new things for the house and give the children a better education. What a blessing it is to have money coming in all the time, and how different the people treat a successful man.

It's really wonderful how people took to my business from the very start, just seemed that everyone had something for me to do—eager to have it done—a cordial welcome everywhere and people came from miles around—almost a dollar cleared every time a dollar taken in. You remember my starting here at home—set off one room which was soon filled with a great assortment of merchandise—some gold, some silver—big and little heaps—how things glistened when the sun came through—then the change to larger quarters owing to increased business with profits growing. It did my heart good to receive such generous encouragement from the people everywhere, for I can't forget my ups and downs—hard knocks—never a boost until this thing happened.

GOODS WERE GOING OUT—MONEY COMING IN—

The people certainly looked kindly upon home industry, and because my business was conducted there in their very midst a feeling of confidence was immediately established. My work has always been well done and I do not fear to meet the same customer twice even ten years from now. I have never been the kind to deceive anyone and would not care to bring that disgrace upon my children even though success was the reward.

Prosperity.

Yes, people do wonder at my sudden rise in the world, but there is nothing remarkable in my performance, simply a case of supplying something which the people did not have but wanted awful bad—never had before—it's a regular business in some large cities, but just as well suited to town and country places as my own success proved. My success has not been due to influence, business training, special schooling or technical knowledge, but to human endeavor, faithful work and earnest purpose. Had I failed to make good in this opportunity when everything was favorable to success it would have been an ever lasting cause for self criticism. It would be an act of ingratitude on my part if I did not give who not only suggested the opportunity but furnished at slight cost everything needed to start the business, including special teaching, valuable instructions and trade secrets and did this so well that my ignorance of the business itself was no drawback at all. Quite a few people from other sections have already written them on my recommendation, for they in all parts of the world, either men or women, in this business at home or traveling, all or spare time, but do not encourage business relations with drones or idlers. I am only one of thousands whom they have started in their twenty years of business experience, and I can't imagine a business which offers equal money-making opportunities to people of limited means —something easy to do, easy to get, easy to maintain, offering almost the only chance for people in moderate circumstances to better their position in life.

Pleasant Business.

Though you, my wife, regard my success as remarkable in comparison with the old days it seems to be quite the regular order of things with their customers, as for example, one man claims $301.27 in two weeks, another $88.16 the first three days and hundreds of similar reports have come to my notice, which makes me feel that there is nothing of personal quality in my own success. You won't forget how skeptical I was at first, but these fears were unfounded, as we both know now, for I have found the business even better than their claim as a money-making chance which anyone without leaving home and without previous experience can manage successfully.

I shall continue advising people out of employment or working hard for a little money to send their name on a card to and receive FREE as I did their proposition, valuable information, testimonials and samples.

They don't offer any impossible inducements, such as $50.00 a day without work, but simply claim that those willing to hustle have every reason to expect from to begin with and more than that as their business grows. I feel sure and believe that you, my wife, also believe that no one will ever regret the day they started with Gray & Co., for they are the largest concern of their kind in the world and are backed by $100,000.00 capital. It's well that you should know these things as I do so as to answer inquiries intelligently when visiting friends outside of my territory.

BOYD.

On November 2, 1906, Charles Calvert Boyd, aged 46 years, passed into the higher life, closing a career of happy, helpful service in the Master's vineyard. For many years Brother Boyd was a valuable member and officer of the Fourth Street congregation here. He was the only son of Brother and Sister S. G. Boyd, of this city, in whose home he died. Bro. Boyd was a most admirable character, a man of optimism and unfaltering faith, a Christian who derived strength and genuine joy from his religion. He was an indulgent husband and a good father, a dutiful son and a devoted brother. He left a wife and one son, his parents and five sisters, besides a host of friends who sympathize most deeply with those to whom he was dearest.

BURTON.

Chas. Oscar Burton, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Burton, and eldest of ten children, was born in Hamilton county, Indiana, Jan. 8, 1867, and died at Scottsburg, Ind., Nov. 1, 1906, after an illness of seven weeks. Reared on a farm he taught in the public schools of the county for fifteen years. He was married to Miss Zadie Kiste, Dec. 23, 1888. Six children blessed their home, four of whom remain. Brother Burton was ordained to the ministry at his home church at Boxley in 1896, since which time he has faithfully served his Master as a preacher of the gospel. During this period of ten years he has labored at several points in central and southern Indiana, all of which will attest to his faithfulness and Christian character. At the time of his death he was serving the churches at Scottsburg, Zoah and Austin, all in Scott county, Indiana, and although he had been on that field only a few months, he was making himself felt and had endeared himself to these brethren. Bro. Harley Jackson, of Seymour, held an appropriate service at the home, Nov. 1. The next day the body was brought to the old home at Boxley for burial in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends. Brethren A. L. Crim, E. L. Day, L. C. Howe and the writer were all present and had a part in the service. Of his closer relatives Brother Burton leaves a wife, three daughters, one son, an aged mother, brothers and sisters to mourn his loss. He will be missed greatly by all who knew him, and the cause of Christ in Indiana sustains a loss unmeasured. W. D. Bartle.

HOPWOOD.

John W. Hopwood was born in Clark county, Ky., 1846; became a Christian 1870; graduated from Abingdon College 1873; married Miss Lucy E. Collison 1875; died Nov. 15, 1906. This is the brief outline of the earthly career of one of the best men I ever knew; how much is to be read between these dates only Brother Hopwood's intimate friends and the recording angel will ever know. His was that quiet, unassuming, beautiful character that sounds no trumpet when distributing the alms of a well-stored mind and heart. The time between his graduation from college and the almost total loss of health four years ago, was spent in teaching and preaching, performing that sort of gospel service that has ever been so effective in the hands of our best college men. During the summer time of his life, he and I labored in widely separated fields, and hence I did not know personally how he spent those years, and he was too modest to sing the praises of his labors in the public prints. But I knew him intimately in the dear old days of '69-'73, in the springtime of those labors, when the birds of his heart sang cheerily of faith and hope and love. Night after night we read together our Greek and our Latin, and talked of what we hoped to accomplish for the Master when the college days should end. Then again I knew him in the autumn of his life, when the rich fruit of his toil hung thick about him, and the sheaves of golden grain lay in abundance at his feet. Rarely have I seen a man so patient in suffering, so unselfish in his desires, so rich in lessons that frail humanity needs. His faithful wife, two consecrated daughters, and one noble son yet remain. To them, as well as to his beloved brother Joe, I offer these poor lines as the tribute of one who shares their sorrow and with them rejoices in the hope of a glad reunion. J. R. Roberts.

HUMPHREY.

Annie Lucile Gerould, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wood Gerould, was born in East Smithfield, Pa., July 20, 1865. She was married to Harry Humphrey by his father, Rev. C. S. Humphrey, Nov. 16, 1898, and passed to her reward from Buffalo, N. Y., October 17, while the great convention was in session. Her natural refinement was made most attractive by the graces of the spiritual life, causing her to be greatly loved by all who knew her. She leaves a husband, three children, a mother and brothers and sisters to mourn her loss. B. H. Hayden.

"Look Unto Me."

Mine eyes were filled with bitter tears,
My face I turned toward the sun;
My tears were changed to pearly drops,
Of finest rainbow colors spun.

My heart bowed down with heavy grief,
I raised my eyes to God's own Son;
The joy-bells rang within my soul,
I murmured low, "Thy will be done."

With trouble sore within my heart,
I in the deep'ning shadow walked,
I turned me t'ward the shining light,
And gaunt behind the shadow stalked.

When deep despair was in my soul,
And I in darkness trod,
It vanished from before my face,
When once I turned toward my God.

PART IV.

CHAPTER VI.

One the train to Crawley, Raymund and Rhoda sat side by side. Raymund carried his valise, and Rhoda a little bag. They were to stay all night at the Crawley hotel (it was, of course, called "the Laclede Hotel,") and possibly two nights. It was just a little pleasure trip back to the scenes of their childhood. Rhoda looked at Raymund with dancing light in her blue eyes. "We will see all our old friends!" she said, "and as they'll know we have no need of them, they'll all be glad to see us. It is splendid! Don't you feel excited?"

"Oh, I don't know," said Raymund indifferently. "I've beeen here once already, since you and I saw the town together."

"You have been here?" Rhoda echoed, her blue eyes startled. "And you never told me a word about it!"

"Why should I? You didn't seem to care what I did," remarked Raymund. "I don't mean to blame you, Rhoda, but really, you know, you quite lost interest in me after you started to that Fulton school."

"I have never lost interest in you, never!" she protested, in her old-time impetuous fashion.

"It flowed very deep then," remarked Raymund. "Oh, yes, I came back here. I called for the tin box. In it was a letter from mother to whichever of us should call for it. I read it. I learned it by heart. Then I destroyed it."

Rhoda turned pale in amazement and, as it seemed in fear. "You called for that tin box!" she faltered accusingly.

"Yes," said Raymund easily. "You know, if a difference ever came between us, either one was at liberty to open the tin box. The difference came and so I went to Crawley. It was quite natural and proper. Isn't that a delightful prairie view? Look at that one lonesome cottonwood tree in the middle of the cornfield."

"What difference do you mean, Raymund?"

"The difference in you, of course, Rhoda. How can you ask? The letter explained it very satisfactorily. You are not my sister, Rhoda. In some way you learned that fact. When you found I was not related to you, of course you ceased to treat me in a sisterly way."

Rhoda caught her breath. "The letter told you that?"

"Yes. Mother explained just how it all came about. It was a great shock at first, but I've had nearly six months to adjust myself to the truth. As for you, you've known it for about three years. Now that we meet again, we meet with our eyes fully opened. We have grown used to the thought that we are of no kin."

"Still, Raymund," said Rhoda gently, "we can never forget how long we lived together as brother and sister, and how mother always treated each of us as her very own child."

"Oh, yes, of course," said Raymund lightly, "we can not be exactly the same to each other as other young ladies and gentlemen, I imagine, but all that is just sentiment, you know."

She looked at him with grieved eyes and heightened color. "Of course," he went on, "everybody will have to know the truth in a short time. I'm sorry there will have to be talk and poor dear Mr. Willby will almost burst with questions! Let's not spoil our little visit by referring to it again."

"And shall we be brother and sister till we go back to Frog Bend?" she asked brightly.

"No," said Raymund, "we can never be that, again. But we don't have to talk about it." It was dinner-time, that is to say, one o'clock, when they stopped at the Laclede hotel. Side by side, but very grave, and almost in silence they partook of the white, tasteless "string-beans," the hard plump peas with their insidious suggestion of soap, the unconquerable steak, chicken that was game to the last, and the high-roofed biscuits with their storage of yellowish, clammy dough. Their first visit was to Miss Glory Aggency. The old maid was far more at her ease than when they had approached her upon the lowly plain of childhood. She took pride in their success, and was much interested in all they had to tell. Mr. Merlin Aggency remembered Raymund and claimed him as a congenial spirit. He showed him the latest parlor ledger and dining-room ledger and yard ledger. "I am still a very busy man," said Mr. Merlin Aggency with great zest. "I am compiling a record of my thermometer. I look at it every hour exactly at the strike. Come, I will show you just how hot it was on this day last year. See—all in neat columns. Many a man, my boy, lives through his day hardly knowing if it is hot or cold, and certainly not knowing how the mercury is moving from hour to hour. Alas, I cannot tell you what tricks it plays at night! If I were rich, I would hire some one to take observations through the night."

"Brother," said his sister gently, "do not excite yourself." As they stood on the porch saying goodby, and just as Mr. Merlin with great heartiness was begging Raymund to come again and hear his discovery concerning the number "7," the clock struck. "Ha!" cried Mr. Merlin Aggency and darted through the house; for his thermometer, unluckily, hung at the rear. The farewells were necessarily protracted. He returned panting to say, "We cannot make it but 71 this time, Sister Glory."

Miss Glory complained that her brother over-exerted himself in darting to his thermometer. Raymund suggested that they hang thermometers at all likely places, that the old accountant need but run to the nearest station. "A capital suggestion!" cried Mr. Merlin Aggency. "I will hang the premises with them! My boy, you never come without giving me valuable assistance. Would that you lived in Crawley!"

"I think I shall live here some day," said Raymund; "at least on a farm near town. I do not like city-life nearly so well."

When they left, Rhoda turned to Raymund in surprise. "You surely do not think of being a farmer, Raymund?"

"Yes, I do," said Raymund. "I believe that in farming, my education can be utilized as thoroughly as in any other vocation. And I love open air and independence. I love the smell of the meadows in the early dew, and the lowing of the cows at evening, and the work—I like that; and the appetite that comes after. If I can rent a farm, I shall presently own one—you'll see! And now, Rhoda, I'll leave you to go out to the Omer farm. You can visit your old school-mates, or just look around, or stay at the hotel. I'll be back in the morning, but I fancy if I find Mr. Omer at the farm, he'll want me to stay there all night."

Raymond was right in this supposition. The lease of the eastern farmer would not expire for another year, but the easterner was only too willing to go; he had not made the farm pay. "It is my purpose," said little Mr. Omer, always brief of speech, and always conscious of the authority that his million dollars carried, "to place this farm in your hands, Raymund, if you will undertake the work. I mean to move on my Texas ranch with the family. I must have some one here that I can trust. I have watched you closely. I studied you when, as a boy, you improved the yard of the Hands' House and did every day a good amount of work that was not required. I've kept track of you in St. Louis. I know about your tailoring at the university. Geisthauser has explained how you labored with his two pudding-heads. I propose to leave everything in your hands, with the advice of and aid of my faithful old hands, Tom and Fred. Will you take this farm for a thousand dollars a year, or will you take it for half of what you can make?"

"I will take it for one year for a half of what I can make," said Raymund, "but you

COBALT

That Wonderful Silver Camp which is startling the world by its enormous riches.

Cobalt is the richest and most unique mining camp the world has ever seen. Millions of dollars of rich silver ores are being shipped monthly to the smelters. Stocks in operating companies which sold a few months ago for par have increased in value from five to twenty times. More millions have been made in the past year in the Cobalt Camp than in the first ten years of the celebrated Comstock Mines.

Powerful mining interests, notably the Guggenheims and American Smelting and Refining Company, are heavy investors in the Camp. Of course, as in all successful mining camps, the camp followers, fakirs and unprincipled promoters are an ever present menace to honest, sincere investment. Cobalt has its share.

The original discovery dates back from November, 1903, but it took a year for those conversant with the discovery to realize its importance, and it was only in May last that the camp began to get busy. Cobalt is to-day the scene of at least thirteen shipping mines. Nine of these have started up within the past three months, some of them within a month. And other mines will begin operations at no long intervals from now on.

The Railway Commission have built a handsome station at Cobalt and a substantial freight shed is now under construction.

Cobalt is situated 103 miles north of North Bay. It is on the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway, and is easily accessible. The journey from Toronto to Cobalt is made in 16 hours, which includes a stop of two hours at North Bay. The Railway Station at Cobalt is practically the center of the camp. Cobalt is 330 miles from Toronto. It is an hour and a half's ride north of Temagami, which is being boomed as a summer resort. There is already a healthy paying traffic on the T. & N. O. Ry., and the commissioners are making it an up-to-date road. Before long the time between Toronto and Cobalt should be reduced to 10 or at most 12 hours

Three years ago the land about Cobalt would not have sold for ten cents an acre. To-day some of it would bring $100 a square inch. There is one tract of forty acres that you could not buy for $10,000,000 in cash. Through the district are other forty-acre tracts which their owners estimate at from hundreds of thousands to millions of dollars. Nevertheless, the land lies in the Heart of the wildest woods on the continent. It is rocky and swampy, and it would take a quarter section to feed a goat.

Its value lies in the enormous silver deposits which have been recently discovered. The rock is streaked with great veins of almost pure silver ore. Three or four Million dollars' worth of this ore has already been shipped, and carloads of it are now on their way to New York, which are worth from $25,000 to $30,000 a car. A car-load of the best picked specimens from a certain mine is said to have sold for $90,000 and another car-load for $50,000 and another for $40,000.

A prominent engineer says:

"Nuggets of silver which are 80 and 90 per cent. pure have been taken out of the mines, and some of the nuggets weigh three and four hundred pounds each. I saw chunks of silver and rock the size of a paving brick which I could not lift. Indeed, much of the ore makes me think of the almost pure copper nuggets which one finds in the Lake Superior mines. These veins of silver are not regular in width nor do they run even throughout. Here and there branch veins jut out from the main one like the veins of a leaf, and the ore has everywhere soaked into the adjoining rocks."

THE COST OF MINING.

It can be taken from the mines for 8 per cent of the value of the product, an outlay of $2,000 bringing forth $25,000 or $30,000 worth of ore. So far it does not pay to ship anything that will yield less than $200 per ton and the most of the shipments are much richer.

The Premier Cobalt Company own in absolute fee 40 acres of most valuable territory of this most remarkable region, showing native silver on the surface; and a shaft down 120 feet in silver ore, increasing in value as depth is obtained. Steam hoists, buildings, all erected and in operation. Harry A. Lee, M. E., of Denver, Col., formerly Commissioner of Mines of the State of Colorado, is the consulting engineer. The Company is officered by men of unquestioned integrity who will conscientiously administer its affairs, and the engineers in charge of the operative department have been responsible for the success of some of the largest mines on this continent.

The Company has a capital of $1,000,000; shares par value $1.00. A limited amount of this stock will be sold at par, and may go to many times its present price within a few weeks, as the property bids fair to be one of Cobalt's largest producers.

ought to know, Mr. Omer, that it will always be my intention to buy a farm of my own."

"How much have you now?" Mr. Omer inquired with a smile.

"Two hundred dollars."

Mr. Omer smiled again. "I'll tell you what I'll do, Raymund," he said. "I never had any sentiment in my business before, but you're a man after my own heart. You shall have the privilege of buying this farm at sixty dollars an acre, no matter how much property is worth hereabouts, and you may buy it just as you are able." They had reached a final agreement when Tom and Fred were seen going to the Hands' House from their evening's work. They were attended by a lad of about nine years of age. "That little fellow is quite a help," said Mr. Omer, nodding his gray head toward the lad. "It's Tom's boy."

Raymund hurried toward the Hands' House, and was a little disconcerted to find that the weeds had overrun the yard and the washpan and soap had again taken up their posts on the front porch.

"If it ain't Raymond!" shouted Tom, redder of face than ever.

"Well, if it ain't!" cried Fred, working his ears and speaking in his thinnest squeak. "Howd'y, Raymund, howd'y!" It was evident, however, that they were not so much at their ease as formerly in his presence. But Raymund was so hearty in his welcome, and so demonstrative in his greeting of Baby (who now went by the name of "Babe") that the ice was presently thawed. The temperature did not, perhaps, rise to boiling point, but they were on very good terms when the young man went back to the brick house with pensive memories of Nelsie Loraine and Mrs. De Fer.

In the meantime, Rhoda had made a discovery in Crawley. In rambling over the familiar streets, after gazing at her mother's former home, and the house once occupied by Brother Bellfield, she visited the old cabin where she had gone with Jack and Raymund to ask Wizzen to help them run away. She was surprised to find that a neat latticework had been built about the once gaping space from under thr house. The yard, too, was fenced off from the road, and showed considerable care. A garden thrived beyond the yard. The broken windows had been replaced by good ones, and before the door hung a little piazza. As Rhoda wondered, the door opened, and old Mrs. Weed looked out with a face of high excitement. She had caught sight of her friend from the window. "Come right out!" cried Mrs. Weed, "come right out, Rhoda!"

"She means in," said Wizzen, peeping over Mrs. Weed's shoulder, and, as in former times, acting as her annotater.

"Come right out!" repeated Mrs. Weed. "Oh, Rhoda, this is such a joyful surprise! You must take supper with us. We're here to stay, here to stay! We're not going to move any more as long as we live! Henry, tell Rhoda the whole story."

"Yes," said Wizzen as Mrs. Weed sat down, still quivering with delight, "it's quite a story, and as the old lady is so deaf she can't hear me, I'll tell the whole of it. By the way, Rhoda, did you ever mention to Raymund or to anyone that the old lady's daughter was in the state prison?"

"No indeed, Wizzen, not a word."

"I knowed you wouldn't!" cried Wizzen, his face beaming. "I was shore of you, Rhoda. Let me tell you. We was in St. Louis back from our New Orleans trip which we found that you and Raymund had went, we couldn't git no satisfaction outen that Miss Pinns which she was but a head and sharp point to stick with, as I told the old lady here. And one night as I was prowling around I come to the police station, not that I had to go there, but viewing the sights, and a woman comes into the chief of police and she tells him how she was sent up for five years, but being good was let off with two-third time, and comes back to the city to hunt work and live good and honest. But she had been two weeks hunting a job and them what knowed of her record wouldn't hire her, and them what didn't, wanted to know, which it wasn't no help when she told them. And she was half-starved, and her clothes no account, and her shoes wearing out, and she asks to be sent back to the pen for the balance of her five year. 'They'll feed me there,' says she, 'and keep me warm.' And she says several nights she slept in goods boxes, and on the benches at the Union Station till they drove her away, and such like. And she was desperate like. Well, the chief of police, he said she couldn't be took back into the penitentiary unless she did some crime agin, and he advised her not to give up, but to keep right, and he sent her out. She stood there on the street, a-cryin' desperate, and saying below her breath that it wasn't no use to try do right and she'd best go throw herself in the river. So I goes up and says, 'Lizzie,' I says. And she knowed me. They wasn't no particle of foolishness or sentimental bamboozle about it. She hadn't never loved me, I reckon though she said she had. But I says to her 'now without no poetry, Lizzie,' which I can make that, too, Rhoda, if at leisure, but I says, 'Without no poetry, and being your lawful husband though hitherto not a source of delight to either of us, but being so, why not come back to me?' And she sorter screamed out and says, 'Will you take me?' and I says, 'As to be a question of being took back into the state prison, maybe to come back as my wife might have some degrees of preference,' I says, 'and there is your old mother wearing out her heart to see you, which I have never let you know that you was ever sent to jail,' I says."

Wizzen paused and ducked his head and looked up at Rhoda as if peering from under a cap that was not there. "You see it was all dry, plain business-like proposition. She was so starved and ragged that she made a good deal more out of it than I did. And she cried and wailed like a wild creature, but she come, and here we are, and no more moving for your Uncle Wizzen! For which it is a good thing to move as a cure-all, no remedy is now needed, and Lizzie is satisfied to be tied down at last, which she was like a wild rabbit, for you chase it and try to tame it at first and away it goes. But she has been so drove by hard luck and hard life, that she's ready to crouch in her furrow even if the dogs was there to take her!"

"Oh, Wizzen!" cried Rhoda with a delight, "how proud you must be!"

"Well no, I can't say that proud is the word. Proud I am not, Rhoda, but middling contented."

Mrs. Weed, now perceiving that the news had been imparted, smiled rapturously at Rhoda and insisted that she should stay to supper and meet her long lost daughter. But Rhoda preferred to preserve her acquaintance of the prodigal through the medium of Wizzen. She departed, assuring them that Raymund would call in the morning.

The Tyranny of Habit.

BY REV. WILLIAM J. DAWSON, D. D.

[Dr. Dawson has become well known in the United States through his evangelistic labors of the past few years, and American Christians are rejoicing that he has taken up a permanent abode among us. Our readers know of his successful career as preacher, lecturer, and author before he was turned in a remarkable way to his present labors. He has written many important books—volumes of poems, sermons, literary essays, fiction, life of Christ. His journalistic powers are great, and he is a frequent contributor to the press. In all these ways, and especially by his effective preaching, he is a winner of souls to the Lord Jesus.—Ed.]

The thing which we do once we find easy to do a second time. Such is the genesis of habit. The thing once done is a thing easy of repetition, and soon acquires a necessity of repetition. This is what is meant by the tyranny of habit.

Let us take a very simple and familiar illustration. Suppose I wake some night after two or three hours of sleep. I make no effort to compose myself. I say, "I am awake now; it is useless to attempt sleep again;" and so I turn up the light and begin to read. The chances are that the next night I shall awake at the same hour. Within a week I shall find the habit of waking at this hour firmly established. Within a month the habit will have become a tyranny, and, however weary I may be, or in need of rest, I shall be forced to spend a part of each night awake and reading. This is an experience so common that many of my readers will at once verify it.

The Slavery of Sin.

Suppose, again, that the habit in question has its root in appetite. I allow some indulgence that I know to be harmful or sinful. Precisely the same process will follow. At each repetition of the act the compulsion will become stronger. In the end I become its slave. Never was there truer word than the word of Christ, "He who sinneth is the servant or the slave of sin." The plea and the attraction of evil usually is that it comes to us disguised as freedom. We break a law, thinking that in doing so we assert our freedom. On the contrary, we impose upon ourselves a bondage. It is not long before we discover that we are the slaves of our iniquity. The thing we would not, that we do, and we cry in misery, "Who will deliver me from the body of this death?"

The great thing to be observed, then, is extreme care in the formation of habits. An act is not necessarily a habit, though it is the beginning of one. Take, again, the instance of waking at a certain hour in the night. If I resolutely compose myself to sleep, in all probability I can regain my sleep. It will be difficult and annoying, but I can do it, I may toss miserably upon my bed, but by dint of effort I can wear out my enemy. But, if I do not make the effort at once, it will be much harder on the second occasion.

Good Habits are as Easily Formed as Bad Ones.

It is also clear that good habits are as easily formed as bad ones. Habit itself knows no morality; it has no preferences. A man may as readily form the habit of sleeping at a certain hour as waking.

Thus, to give a personal instance, I formed years ago the habit of sleeping by the clock at any time during the day. I can take my watch in my hand, say to myself, "I can afford fifteen minutes' sleep," and I am asleep almost as soon as I have said it. In the same way, I can wake at the very moment I wish, and am rarely behindhand by a minute. If I wish to wake in the morning at a given time, I can do so; I have only to give orders to my brain over night. To make assurance doubly sure, I often give instructions to some one to wake me when I have a journey to take or an engagement to keep, but in nine cases out of ten I need no calling.

The brain never sleeps; it stands sentinel through the long hours of unconsciousness. If I trust it, it will not betray my confidence. We are essentially self-governing creatures, and we can control our habits just as we control our limbs, our speed, our actions.

Many people who practise the art of letters set out with a stupid idea they can write only when "the afflatus" comes. They wait for a mood, for an inspiration; and the consequence is that they often wait in vain, and waste great quantities of time.

But the greatest literary workers know better. Huxley defined genius as a mind always under control, always kept at heel, and ready to meet any demand that might be made upon it. Harriet Martineau said that she soon discovered that it was folly to wait for an inspiration. She accustomed herself to begin writing at a certain hour each morning, whether she had anything to say or not, and she soon found that her brain responded to her demand upon it like an obedient machine. Anthony Trollope wrote early each morning before he went to business, and with such regularity that he never failed to produce exactly the amount of manuscript which he desired. Walter Scott wrote his novels in the early morning, long before any one but himself was awake.

Almost all great writers have been methodical workers. They have accustomed their minds to obey the call of habit, and habit has thus become to them second nature. The tyranny of habit has been in this way turned to good account, and has become a source of strength.

The Habit of Diligence.

When John Wesley called his followers Methodists, he meant no more than this—that they were a people who lived upon a method. They lived by rule, and the rule applied to their time, to their thought, and to the general disposition of their life.

Wesley himself was the example of what he taught. He found that by the parsimonious use of time he could get through an enormous quantity of work without fatigue. Some of his maxims are wise enough to be far better known than they are. For example, "Never be unemployed, and never be triflingly employed."

It is a matter of perpetual wonder to the biographers of Wesley that one man was able to accomplish so much. He not only governed with wisdom and personal vigilance a vast and growing community, but he preached regularly from three to four times a day, travelled yearly many thousands of miles, read all the current literature that was worth reading, engaged in public controversies, wrote with his own hand an immense number of letters every year, and finally published about a hundred books, including many departments of literature not immediately connected with his religious work, such as grammars, histories, treatises on physics, and even abridgements of works of fiction. How was all this done? By making diligence a habit. If habit was for him a tyranny, it was a beneficent tyranny.

We need not quarrel, then, with the term, "the tyranny of habit," since it stands for much that is best in life as well as for much that is painful. The thing is, to make right habits our tyrants, for in good and evil alike we are the children of habit. Virtue is a habit as well as vice, industry as well as indolence, truth as well as falsehood, high and noble thought as well as sordid and vulgar imagination.

It is not really more difficult to do right than to do wrong. There are many persons I have known who would find it much harder to do wrong than to do right, simply because they have established in their lives, by long practice and discipline, the habit of pure thought, high sentiment, and honorable conduct. Cynicism smiles at the man who cannot tell a lie; yet there are multitudes of men and women who have that noble incapacity. The profligate, who takes all men to be as himself, sneers at the man who has no taste for sensuality; yet there are multitudes of men who are genuinely incapable of feeling anything but pleasure. The business knave assumes that all business is knavery; yet all around him are men who would rather be beggared than prosper by falsehood and injustice.

When Joseph said in the hour of his great temptation, "How can I do this great wickedness?" he simply expressed that invincible repugnance to evil which comes from the habit of righteousness. When Luther said, "Here I take my stand; I can do no other," he expressed the incapacity for cowardice which was the result of the habit of courage and clear thinking. If our habits make us, we make our habits; and it is possible for us to acquire habits that in the day of temptation are our defence, our anchorage, our invincible city of refuge.

Breaking Bad Habits.

But what if we have acquired evil habits? What if little by little we have allowed ourselves to be entangled in habits which debase and corrupt us? The answer is that habit is the creature of will. The will that makes the habit can unmake it.

An excellent illustration on this point is the story of the great scientist who was lowered into the crevasse of a glacier to observe its formation, and found that when he signalled to be drawn up, his assistants could not draw him up, because they had forgotten the weight of the rope. We are all apt to forget the weight of the rope.

I think that it is well for us, even in habits of sense which may have no distinct wrong in them, every now and again to test the weight of the rope; or, in other words, to ascertain whether we are free. I know smokers who at intervals put their pipes away for a month, just to assure themselves that they can do so. There are many other things in which the same renunciation would be wise—renunciation or abstention for a time, just to ascertain that our freedom is not impaired. I imagine that this is the principle which underlies the habit of periodic fasting, once recognized as a plain duty of religion, but now almost totally ignored in Protestant communities: it is the assertion of the freedom of the spirit against the encroachment of the flesh.

No one finds these acts easy, but no wise man will deny that they have great spiritual uses. And the fact that men can do these things is the encouragement to us to attempt them. Let no one then, be hopelessly dismayed because some evil habit has fastened on him. Let him believe that it can be broken, and all things are possible to him that believeth. Fight the good fight, and fight it to a finish. Re-enforce the will by prayer, and set about the task of your deliverance with faith in God, and reliance on His grace. And remember always, when the fight is hardest, the great lines of Emerson:

> "So near is glory to our dust,
> So close is God to man,
> When Duty whispers low, 'Thou must,'
> The youth replies, 'I can.'"

Wock 'O Bages.

"Wock o' Bages, keft for me"—
Through the house the words are ringing,
Uttered by a lisping tongue;
Listen! 'Tis our darling singing—
"Wock o' Bages, keft for me,
'Et me hide myse'f in thee."

Papa, in his study writing,
As he hears the sweet refrain,
Pauses in his work to listen,
Waits to catch the words again:
"Wock o' Bages, keft for me,
'Et me hide myse'f in thee."

"Wock o' Bages, keft for me"—
And the voice is soft and low,
And we bend to catch the meaning,
For the breath comes hard and slow:
"Wock o' Bages, keft for me,
'Et me hide myse'f in thee."

In a darkened room he lies,
Yet the same sweet song is singing,
And into our breaking hearts
Peace and resignation bringing:
"Wock o' Bages, keft for me,
'Et me hide myse'f in thee."

"Wock o' Bages, keft for me"—
"Mamma, sing it; you know how;
Charlie's—dying—mamma, darling—
Won't you—sing it—for—him—now?"
"Wock—o'—Bages—keft—for—me.
'Et—me—hide—my—se'f—in—thee."

"Rock af Ages, cleft for me"—
'Tis a mother sings it now;
Death has marked her precious baby,
And the damp is on his brow—
"Rock of Ages, cleft for me, Let me hide msyelf in thee."

"Let me hide myself in thee:
Thou who hast the wine-press trod;
Spare me yet this agony,
He is all we have, O God!
Father, must we drink the cup?
Must we give our darling up?"

"Wock o' Bages"—and our baby
Sang the rest to Christ alone,
As the angels tenderly
Bore him to the great white throne.
"Wock o' Bages, keft for me,"
And he hid himself in thee.

A Grumbling Snowflake.

Some little snowflakes were sleeping in their home in cloud-land.

The Father sent a cold wind to awaken them. As soon as they were awake, the wind told them they must go on a long journey—away down to the earth to help cover up the little seeds and plants that were sleeping there.

"Come, my dears, you must hurry, for the plants have not a single blanket or quilt to keep them warm. Jack Frost is around down there, and he will freeze them sure if you don't hurry. Then what will the little girls and boys say when the spring comes, and there are no plants and flowers for them, and no wheat to make into flour for their bread? My, my! You must hurry!"

The kind but noisy old wind blustered about doing his best to get them all awakened and dressed for their journey.

Jack Frost came to help him. He gave them each a lovely white dress, made from such beautiful patterns.

All the snowflakes were glad to go, for they did so want to help the little roots and seeds. Did I say all? Well, there was one little grumbler-flake who seemed to want to stay in the cloud, for he kept grumbling away all the time the rest were getting ready. This is what he said:

"The idea! Just think of me, going away down to that big earth! I was down there before, and I know it's like—the biggest place you ever saw. I'm so small they'd never see me there, and as for helping to keep the plants from freezing, I'd like to help keep the poor little things warm until spring comes, but you see I'm too small. I could not cover the tiniest speck of ground. One little flake on the great big brown earth! He, ha! who ever heard of such a thing! But if you're all going, I suppose I'd better go, too, although I know I can't do any good."

The other little snowflakes just laughed at the grumbler snowflake and said, "Just wait and see, just wait and see!"

Such a jolly time as they had going down through the air, dancing and playing—down—down, till it seemed as if they would never get to the end of their journey.

They talked and laughed about how glad the little seeds and plants would be when they covered them up so snug and warm, and one little flake said, "Oh, I'm so happy, to think that I'm really going to be of use in the big world!"

All the way down the little grumbler kept grumbling, and the other little flakes jostled and danced against him in their play to try to brighten him up. But he only said, "Oh, if I were only bigger—only bigger!"

And this is the chorus the other little snowflakes sang to answer him with:

"The Father knows best,
The Father knows best;
He sent us,
He sent us;
He'll do all the rest."

At last they came in sight of the brown earth, and the little grumbler said:

"Just look! just look! What did I tell you?"

Nearer and nearer they came—oh, such a big place to cover! Could the grumbler be right? But no, still they sang:

"The Father knows best,
The Father knows best;
He sent us,
He sent us;
He'll do all the rest."

Faster and faster they went; nearer and nearer, down, down—at last one little flake touched, another little flake touched, and, just as he touched, the grumbler said:

"Now, wasn't I right?"

He turned his head, expecting to see so many fields left bare and brown and cold, but—everywhere he looked was beautiful white snow, the whitest, thickest, warmest blanket you ever saw—not a speck of brown earth to be seen.

You see, it happened like this: when this little grumbler was turning his head, one little snowflake touched and covered just one tiny little speck of ground. Another touched and covered another tiny little speck. Each one did his own little part, and when they had done that there was nothing else left to do, for all was done, and the earth had on her winter blanket of snow.

Then the grumbler said: "I was wrong—foolish and wrong. I will never grumble again."

"For nothing's too small,
For nothing's too small;
Do your part,
Do your part;
'Littles' make 'all.'"

—What fuel is to engines books are to preachers. Better order our catalog.

—We supply the best unfermented communion wine at 75 cts. per quart. Purchaser pays express.

—For a Christmas present we suggest one of our flexible, silk sewed, leather lined, American Standard Revised Bibles, printed on linen paper—$5, and will last a lifetime.

—There is just one price to all our readers, save preachers. When you pay $1.50 for your Christian-Evangelist you have the satisfaction of knowing you are getting it at the lowest price.

—Ample expositions of the mid-week prayer-meeting, Endeavor, and Bible school lessons are found in each issue of "Our Young Folks," together with a department devoted to special instruction in the upbuilding and development of our schools.

—"The Little Ones," as its name indicates, is a paper for the nursery. It is printed in colors, and contains short stories, merry jingles and lesson talks that will from the beginning inculcate in the children taste and love for the best literature. Only 50 cents.

—The Garrison Library, series one—A reconstructive theology: "Helps to Faith," "The Holy Spirit," "Christian Union." Series two—Most helpful of devotionals: "Alone with God," "Half Hour Studies at the Cross," "The Heavenward Way." These great books by a great Christian man for $5.00.

—For one new subscription before January 1, 1907, we give as a premium a large, long primer New Testament, or a large picture of Editor Garrison. For two, we will send either a stereoscope with 50 scenic cards, or a flexible cover Teachers' Bible. What excellent Christmas gifts these premiums will make!

—"The Round Table" is a paper for bright boys and girls. It is filled with entertaining stories, travel sketches, and familiar talks on important themes that will greatly enrich the lives of our star-eyed youth. It costs but 50 cents per annum. We suggest to parents that in ordering literature for the children it is well to require an editorial supervision that is concerned about the moral culture of the young reader.

—Friends write that if we would lower the price of The Christian-Evangelist they could displace a paper whose casuistic and litigious spirit they do not wish disseminated in their community. Labor, paper and other publishers' requisites have so advanced in cost of late as to make it impossible to publish The Christian-Evangelist in its present form for less than $1.50. We ask our friends to help us on this basis to make it a fixture in 100,000 homes before 1909.

—We believe that soon our own Bible school literature will be reinstated in practically all our churches. There is a value in the form of sound words our people are beginning to appreciate as never before. Our doctrines are enshrined in words and sentences with which even children should be familiarized. The Christian Publishing Company's Bible school supplies are edited by one of the most loyal and scholarly living Disciples. Why not procure the best since it is just as convenient and no more expensive?

—300, 500, or 1,000 Christian-Evangelists judiciously distributed each week in the vicinity where a revival meeting is in progress will insure not only a full house, but a large congregation of prepared listeners. Without extra cost we send with the first shipment a lot of pink circulars containing the pictures of pastor and evangelist and suitable local announcements. Concerning their use Frank W. Allen, of Odessa, Mo., writes: "Let me say how delighted I am with the plan of using The Christian-Evangelist during a meeting. It stimulates interest and adds a dignity to the local work."

—"Our Young Folks" may suggest a juvenile paper to those not familiar with it, but for the juvenile world we publish "The Little Ones," "The Young Evangelist," and "The Round Table." "Our Young Folks" is not regulated by the almanac—it is for the youthful-hearted even if old age has frosted their locks. In addition to its already valuable features a new department on practical Bible school methods and training is now conducted by a talented teacher of many years' experience. Every pastor, superintendent and teacher should immediately become possessed of this invaluable help. Annual subscription, 75 cents.

—Perhaps more new subscriptions at the regular $1.50 rate are coming now by singles and twos than ever before, but in addition to these we are pleased to report the following new clubs from representative churches.

Describe your case, as I forward treatment to suit ailment.

Ninety-three per cent of the people of this country are suffering from some form of catarrh.

They are acting as store-houses and distributing stations of germ life that breed diseases ranging from incipient catarrh to quick consumption. Air is the agency that brings these germs into the air passages, and it must be the agency to remove them.

CATARRH SUFFERERS

Should realize the fact that Catarrh is a very dangerous ailment. It is the beginning of nearly all diseases of the head, throat and larynx and is the forerunner of Consumption.

First a slight cold, acute in form, being neglected becomes worse, finally chronic, and leads to still worse conditions. How important it is that every person consider this matter seriously for himself.

Catarrh is constantly on the increase. There is more today than five years ago. Almost all people are subject to frequent colds. They are seemingly becoming more susceptible to this influence each year. Various causes lead to this condition. I am offering you my Spray Medicator, and Liquid Spray to counteract these emergencies.

I offer you the opportunity to try it for 10 days free. What more could you ask? I am willing to give you the benefit of the doubt. I do not want your money unless you are pleased with the treatment. The only way you can find out whether it will suit you, is to send for it. Try it. If it does not prove all you expect, return it. It is all simple and easy. See my special trial offer.

Symptoms of Catarrh of the Head and Throat.

Have you any of the following symptoms? If so, you have Catarrh in some form and should immediately send for a medicator on trial free. See special trial offer.

A $250,000 CENTENNIAL FUND

In Personal Offering for Land and Buildings by

Our Centennial in Pittsburg, 1909

The friends of the Foreign Society express themselves enthusiastically in favor of this important move

A STRIKING CONTRAST

Contrast this grass hut with the home of F. E. Hagin at Tokyo, Japan, a picture of which is below.

To compel the missionaries to live in century-old, vermin-infected, unventilated buildings is to handicap them in their work and endanger their health and their very lives.

GRASS HOUSE AT DAMOH, INDIA,

Where J. G. McGavran and family lived for a time. They are missionaries of the Foreign Society. They uttered no word of complaint. It is evident they could not do their best work living here. It is not sufficient protection from the extreme heat and heavy rains, and besides there is not sufficient room. We ought not ask our missionaries to live in a place like this. Their health and lives are endangered.

Contrast this home with the grass hut at Damoh, India, the picture of which is above.

HOME OF F. E. HAGIN, TOKYO, JAPAN.

This is a modern, up-to-date home, recently built by the Foreign Society at a cost of about $2,000. It is commodious and convenient. It will last many years. Here the missionary and his family can live in comfort and do their best work. Their health and lives will be protected. Besides a good example to the native population. It helps to give them a higher estimate of Christianity.

GOOD NEWS.

A good man and wife have just turned over $8,450 to the Foreign Society on the Annuity Plan. This goes into the Centennial Building Fund. We hope others will take this step. We are receiving cash and pledges every day for a great Centennial Fund. Will you not join the friends in this mighty movement? Please let us hear from you at once.

What Some of the Friends Think.

The call for building equipment seems a most modest one on the part of our Foreign Society. With the increase and development of the work there must be increasing demands for such a building plant to insure permanency. F. D. POWER.
Pastor Vermont Avenue Church.
Washington, D. C.

I hope the Foreign Society will be successful in providing additional building equipment in foreign fields. Necessary buildings are a great help anywhere, but especially on the foreign field.
R. E. HIERONYMUS,
President of Eureka College.
Eureka, Ill.

I am in perfect accord with the proposition of the Foreign Society to secure $250,000 for buildings and equipment in foreign fields. It is timely, and if accomplished will be a great stride in advance in our foreign work. C. J. TANNAR.
Pastor of Central Church.
Detroit, Mich.

I can say without hesitation that I think no part of the work of the Foreign Board is more important than that of erecting proper buildings for the missionaries in foreign fields. It seems to me scarcely possible to build up a church of influence in any heathen land, or even in any civilized land, without a suitable house in which to hold their meetings, and suitable apartments in which to reside. I hope that you will very soon realize your purpose and expectations in this matter.
J. W. McGARVEY,
President of the College of the Bible.
Lexington, Ky.

To provide homes for our missionaries is the sanest business policy introduced into the realm of the Lord's work. Properly housed, all their forces and resources are conserved, wastes are avoided, and the missionaries are ever at their best. When to comfortable homes there is added complete working equipment in chapels, schools, hospitals and orphanages, we are only multiplying the power of our representatives at the front. Churches at home should share the sadness of our missionaries in often facing great opportunities with their hands tied by lack of proper equipment.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

LOOKING TOWARD PITTSBURG.

No other enterprise in which we are engaged as a people will do more to popularize the church, enthrone Christ in all hearts, and create a Christian enthusiasm that will not fall short of splendid success, than "The Gospel of the Helping Hand" that is being so ably advocated by Secretary Mohorter. God grant him and his faithful co-laborers even more than they have dared to ask in their Centennial program printed below.

Last week the Foreign Society received a pledge for $5,000 from a generous friend in California with which to erect a hospital in Tung Chow, China. This is the kind of Centennial preparation that is needed. Tung Chow is a city just recently entered by our missionaries. We have no land or buildings there. The three families stationed in that important point need homes; suitable homes will conserve their health and their very lives. Read the foreign missionaries' appeal on the opposite page and have fellowship with this generous Disciple that the new hospital may be equipped as soon as completed. There should be many of these dedicated to the glory of the Great Physician by 1909.

For forty-three years The Christian-Evangelist has continuously, enthusiastically and most effectively advocated and supported every great Disciple enterprise, save the Christian Publishing Company. "Why don't you say a word for yourself, John?" Friends have complained that while we have helped carry on to victory every other crowning enterprise of our brotherhood, we have neglected this on which depend vast interests and in the estimation of many our hopes of ever realizing the religious and church ideals of the "fathers" of this Restoration. The Christian-Evangelist has never aspired to be the chief conservator or repository of the faith once delivered, but we are assured that tens of thousands of Disciples fear for the future of our plea should the influence of The Christian-Evangelist ever wane. We confess that most that has been done for advancing the interests of this House has had initiation and completion with its friends. Henceforth in the same spirit we advocate Christian missions, Church Extension, Christian education and benevolence we will aid our friends in the enterprise of placing The Christian-Evangelist in 100,000 homes and its related literature in churches and Bible schools. "What Our Friends are Saying" is evidence of the spirit of the people and that the popular heart is with us. Come, go, let us all work together and by 1909 so intrench The Christian-Evangelist and its collateral interests in the hearts and patronage of 100,000 homes, and 11,000 churches that earnest souls need not be anxious lest the future be without its inspiration and guidance.

If you believe the aid of this House to be essential to a great Centennial victory, will you not show your faith by your works and keep our subscription clerks busily engaged in enlisting new readers and have thousands of additional children studying the Bible school lessons prepared by eminent, loyal and scholarly Disciples. In confidence that it will mean much to the brotherhood we await responses to this appeal.

Benevolent Association and the Centennial.

BY J. H. MOHORTER.

The steadily rising tide of interest in the work of restoring apostolic benevolence is one of the most comforting, encouraging omens of our Centennial. Twenty years ago almost no one in this great religious movement was giving serious thought to this most Christ-like ministry. How remarkable the change wrought by these years. Our National Benevolent Association has come into existence. Through its agency we have opened two hospitals, two homes for aged, dependent brethren, and six orphanages. Twenty years ago, the people who claim to stand for the simple faith of the apostolic church and the beautiful spirit of the Christ were giving $85 for purely benevolent work. Last year they freely gave $91,797.03 to feed the hungry and clothe the naked in the name of him who said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me." In these years seventy-eight helpless old brethren and 4,065 homeless, parentless children have found salvation from hunger, cold and, possibly, crime, under the protecting love of this great brotherhood. Through this ministry 2,207 little neglected waifs have found Christian homes of their own. At the present time sixty dependent old brethren are growing mellow and sweet for the home above, and 225 parentless children are blossoming into beautiful manhood and womanhood under the fostering love of a loyal church.

The most hopeful sign, however, is in the growing appreciation of the value of this ministry in this intensely practical age. It is clearly recognized that the most effective antidote for the prevalence of the lodge spirit and the spread of certain religious crazes is found in this ministry of helpful deeds. Everywhere men are saying, "The best way to restore the church to her primitive place and power is to restore the spirit of apostolic benevolence." From all parts of the country calls are coming for the opening of homes and hospitals. If this enthusiasm can be wisely guided for the next few years we can cover the land with this ministry of love, and so save every homeless child and worthy saint from the almshouse and thrill this whole brotherhood with the spirit that made victorious the church of the apostles. To guide this growing enthusiasm the association has set before the brotherhood the following splendid Centennial aims::

1. To raise a special fund of $40,000 to clear all our institutions of debt.

2. To secure a building adequate for the work of our Central orphanage in St. Louis.

3. To provide a good home for incurables, centrally located.

4. To open at least two more homes for the aged, one on the Pacific slope, and one in the south.

5. To establish an open air sanitarium in Colorado or New Mexico for those afflicted with tubercular troubles.

6. To open at least five orphanages, one in the southwest, one in the northwest, and three in the section of the country where our people are most numerous.

7. To erect a great memorial hospital in Pittsburg.

8. To raise at least $100,000 with which to begin the endowment of our various institutions.

What more worthy aim can we have than to be able to say at Pittsburg, in 1909, no homeless child, no helpless Disciple need be left to suffer. All are protected in Christ's name.

What Our Friends Are Saying.

I am sure our membership will be greatly benefited through their reading The Christian-Evangelist.—Una Dell Berry, Lafayette, Ind.

Enclosed find $1.50 for my Christian-Evangelist. I have only been taking it one year, but like it so well that I can not possibly get along without it.—James Gresham, Glasgow, Mo.

I send one new subscription and my renewal to The Christian-Evangelist. I would deny myself many things in preference to giving up my Christian-Evangelist.—N. D. Evans, Clinton, Mo.

I think The Christian-Evangelist is the greatest Christian worker I have ever known. I am in full accord with its teachings and wish it the greatest success. Enclosed find express order for $1.50.—W. H. Smith, Cottage Grove, Ore.

I congratulate The Christian-Evangelist force on the make-up and matter of the Alexander Campbell number. As an introductory service, I read extracts from it to my congregation Sunday evening.—W. F. Reynolds, (minister) Cleburne, Texas.

I enclose $1.50 for my Christian-Evangelist. I like its fraternal spirit so much. It is so helpful to me, as there is no organization of our people where I live, and I must worship with other religious bodies.—Mrs. Olive Thompson, Williams, Iowa.

It is hard to state in finite terms the value of The Christian-Evangelist to a preacher or to any Christian worker. As for me, I never want to be without it and, more than that, I do not want others to be without it.—G. W. Woodbury, minister, Hiram, O.

I want to commend your plan on behalf of the State Mission's offering and thank you for the interest The Christian-Evangelist is taking in this fundamental work for the support of world-missions.—J. O. Rose, Cor. Sec., Indianapolis.

D. F. Hendrickson, of Glendora, Cal., has recently suffered the loss of his saintly and now sainted mother. He thus writes: No matter how old or how young, there is no good time to lose a mother and no time but what you need her. I shall take The Christian-Evangelist if for no other reason than because she loved it so."

We did not get to the Buffalo convention, but we want you to know how much we appreciate the excellent report of the great meeting in last week's Christian-Evangelist. You have a large circle of readers here and all have words of praise for the effective way you have brought this convention to our very doors.—W. W. Burks, (minister) Nevada, Mo.

Congress.

Congress is in session again. It has become a custom for Congress to wait (and waste) a day before having the President's message. The President scandalized the old-timers by sending in a batch of appointments to be acted upon before the message was read, thus preventing the usual adjournment and saving a day. The message deals with the topics which it was expected to deal with. Much of it has to do with economic and industrial questions. Some of the lines of legislation which are recommended to Congress are: The prohibition of campaign contributions by corporations; to give the government the right of appeal on technical points in criminal cases; to limit the use of injunctions and prevent their abuse especially in labor cases; to limit the hours of labor of railway employes; to establish more thorough and effective control by the Federal Government over all capital, and over all corporations engaged in interstate commerce; to secure an amendment to the Constitution giving the Federal Government jurisdiction over the question of marriage and divorce; to revise and reform the currency laws (the need stated but no specific suggestions offered); to give the Philippines a lower tariff or free trade with the United States; to provide for the naturalization of Japanese. The President's message includes an excellent sermon on moral obligations in international politics, with special reference to the present flurry of anti-Japanese feeling.

How They Do It in England.

The soap trust in England has gone down to a sudden death and a dishonored grave. There is a high degree of effectiveness about the indignant protest of the thoroughly aroused Englishman. When the soap trust was organized as "a working arrangement between the leading soapmakers of the United Kingdom," its promoters thought they had taken into consideration every element in the situation and that their success was sure. They had, in fact, considered everything, except public opinion. The public was against it. The papers smote it, and the soap-buyers sought out obscure and inferior brands rather than patronize the trust. The fever of indignation did not die till its work was done. The boycott did not stop till the trust was defunct. The leaders of this busted trust, in announcing the discontinuance of the "working arrangement of the leading soapmakers," said that it "has been received with such disfavor by the trade and public as to make it unworkable." When a working arrangement becomes unworkable, there is nothing for it but to confess failure. This true story of a trust that failed shows that the people can come pretty near to getting anything they want if they want it enough to undergo some inconvenience in getting it and if they keep on wanting it until they do get it. This is a very practical application of President Hadley's publicity-and-ostracism cure for trusts. But the successful application of this remedy requires a continuity as well as a fervor of indignation which it is hard for the average American to maintain.

Pan-American Railway.

One of the perennial railway projects, which thrill the imagination, is the plan of constructing a continuous line of railroad from New York to Buenos Ayres. Of course a large part of this road is already in existence and in operation. The total distance between the two cities named by the best route is 10,400 miles. The building of 3,700 miles of road would make the connecting link between the North American and the South American railroads. But that is a good deal of railroad. It would cost, we are told, $185,000,000. Would it pay? Probably not. The competition with the water route would prevent it from getting much through freight. The through passenger business would not pay interest on the investment—it never does. And over a great part of the route there would be practically no local business, either freight or passenger. There is no insurmountable engineering difficulty in the way of such a pan-American railroad. In fact, one is scarcely justified in admitting that there are any insurmountable engineering difficulties nowadays. But the economic difficulties would be very great. Perhaps, until some great and unlooked-for change of conditions comes, we will have to be content to call such enterprises economically impossible, except in cases like the trans-Siberian railroad, where a political and military motive is added to the financial.

The Backbone of Progress.

Secretary Wilson's report issued upon the eve of Thanksgiving day, was a timely document. The statement that the prosperity of the farmer is the basis and foundation of the prosperity of everybody else, is old and hackneyed, but that does not keep it from being true. It is a fact that among those who earn their living honestly there can not ordinarily be much prosperity unless the farmer is getting his show. And this year he is getting it. The value of the farm products of this country for the present year, on the basis of the prices which the farmer will receive for his goods, is estimated by the Secretary of Agriculture at $6,794,000,000. It is a comfort to reflect that in spite of the vast aggregations of capital in the hands of the oil king and others of his kind, the American farmer collectively could buy out the biggest of them a dozen times over out of a single year's income. And it is pleasing to remember also that by far the greater part of this vast agricultural wealth belongs not to great landlords, but to small farmers, to whom the profits of the year will mean not the means for indulgence in senseless and demoralizing luxury, but the opportunity for better and more wholesome living.

Immigration to the South.

A few weeks ago a ship-load of immigrants from Europe arrived at Charleston, S. C. The event was celebrated with much rejoicing, because it was the first ship to land a large number of immigrants at a southern port. If in some way we could get our incoming millions from Europe to go south instead of stopping in New York and a few other cities of the north and east, the immigration problem would solve itself for a few years. The south needs the workers and the immigrants need the opportunities which are offered by the south's need. There is truth in every word said by the opponents of free immigration about the danger of this great mass of undigested and unassimilated foreign population. And there is truth in all that is said on the other side about the vastness of this country and its almost infinite capacity to furnish homes and work for all comers. The trouble is that the comers and the work do not get together. An immigrant who is a peril in New York might be a blessing in Colorado or Alabama. It seems superficially probable also, that an influx of foreign labor into the south would contribute something to the solution of the race problem by freeing the south from its complete dependence upon negro labor.

Sanctification a Condition of Unity.

It is a significant fact that in the great intercessory prayer of our Lord, just before he prays for the unity of his disciples, to the end that the world may be converted, he makes this petition for them: "Sanctify them in the truth: thy word is truth. * * * * And for their sakes I sanctify myself that they themselves also may be sanctified in truth." Here, then, is a condition precedent to unity, namely: the sanctification of believers in Christ to the will and service of Christ.

The word sanctify here means the setting apart to holy uses. Christ devoted himself wholly to the will and work of God, in accomplishing human redemption. To this sublime task he consecrated the infinite resources of his mind and heart, and for this end he sacrificed his life. Indeed sanctification of himself to this work began when he, "existing in the form of God, counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross." The human mind is lost in bewildering awe and admiration in seeking to fathom the fathomless depths of this language. Such was the complete consecration or sanctification of Christ to human salvation.

Now his prayer is that his disciples may be sanctified to this same work. Indeed his sanctification was in order that they might be sanctified. It is clear, too, from the connection in which this petition occurs, and from the very nature of the case, that in the thought of Jesus this complete surrender to the will of God, implied in sanctification, was a condition of that unity for which he prayed. Our word consecration expresses very well what Jesus means by our sanctification in the truth. It means putting ourselves at his service, and the abandonment of whatever hinders us from doing his will.

What is involved in our sanctification to the work of saving the world? Nothing less than our complete submission to the will of God, and the putting of all that we have and are at the service of God to be used by him for the world's redemption. It involves, certainly, the putting away of whatever hinders the progress of the kingdom of God in the world. If our worldliness, our indifference, our carnality, our divisions, our party names, party creeds, and party spirit, are obstacles to the triumph of God's reign over man, then our consecration to the work that brought Christ into the world, involves the surrender of all of these things for his sake, and for humanity's sake.

Is this asking too much of us? Shall it be said of those who claim to be followers of him who disrobed himself of glory and took the form of a servant, and died the death of the cross for our redemption, that they are unwilling to abandon their denominational pride and ambition, their divisions and all that perpetuates these divisions, in order to promote the triumph of the church and the redemption of the race? It is written, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life." O, when will it be written that the church, the bride of Christ, so loved the world that she gave up her denominational pride, her party names, her sectarian aims and worldly ambitions, in order that Christ's followers might be united and the world converted.

This is the relation, then, between our sanctification or complete consecration to the work of God, and the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples. Just so long as the church loves the things which divide it, weaken it, and destroy its influence, more than it loves Christ and the unity for which he prayed, its consecration is incomplete and its complete unity can not be realized. Is it not evident that we have had a good deal of unsanctified zeal in behalf of unity? The cause is too holy to be helped by unsanctified efforts. Is there not reason for honest self-examination on the part of all who own Christ as Lord?

Perhaps the emphasis needed just now is on consecration rather than on efforts to formulate bases of union. Let us get closer to the great, throbbing, bleeding heart of Christ, enter into fellowship with his sufferings, and share in the joy of doing his will, and our divisions will melt away like frost before the rising sun, and we shall flow together as kindred drops, and heart will touch heart, and hand grasp hand in a united effort for the salvation of the lost. To this complete consecration we are called by the prayer of Christ, by the needs of the world, by the great providential movements of our time, and by the sweet pleadings of the Holy Spirit now working in a multitude of human hearts to bring about a united church and a redeemed world.

Progress in Christian Union Sentiment.

Rev. William States Jacobs of the First Presbyterian Church in Houston, Texas, preaching on the question of our differences and divisions, points out the fact that there are as great differences among the members of his own congregation as exist between members of different denominations. He further emphasizes the fact that persons are not required to affirm their belief in predestination and other doctrines of the church, in order to be a Christian or even a member of that church. "All believe and hold to the great essential —the divinity of Jesus Christ." The sermon closes with the following statement:

> "The differences are being forgotten. We are coming to see that the things that divide us are not nearly so great as the things that unite us. And so a new era has come. A few months ago I sat in a great convention of young men in Nashville, and saw there the splendid sight of hundreds of the choicest of our Christian college youth uniting in one great cause and that the evangelization of the world. I saw a young man, one of the leaders in the movement, stand before his fellow young men and tell of the tremendous possibilities of the work in the world to-day, of the opportunities which the field offers, and there I saw them fired with the determination which they so aptly expressed in their motto, "The world for Christ in this generation." And there sat Presbyterians, and Methodists, and Baptists, and Episcopalians, and people of other shades of Christian belief, all uniting in one common effort.
> "The era of strife and dissension has thus given way to the missionary era. The church is fired with the determination to carry the gospel to the uttermost part of the earth, and as one solid army it is united in heart and purpose. The time is past for dogmatic contentions. The work, the vast work that the world offers, is before us and we must be about our Father's business."

This is the key note that is everywhere being sounded and in this kind of atmosphere the church will ultimately grow out of its differences "into the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of his will, spiritual growth—that is to be growth in the knowledge of Christ and of his will. spiritual growth—that is to be the death of sectarianism and the efficient cause of a united church.

The State Must Protect Its Business.

Attorney-General Hadley of Missouri has recently given an opinion in the case of the Harvest King Distilling Company of Kansas City, which had lodged complaint with the state board of railroad and warehouse commissioners against the American Express Company, because the latter would not accept from it C. O. D. packages of liquor for transportation, that ought to be instructive and suggestive. The Attorney-General holds that the companies can not refuse to receive these shipments, on the following ground:

> "The complainant is engaged in a business, the legality of which is recognized by the fact that the state receives from it a license fee, for which it is permitted to engage in the sale of liquor in Jackson county, Mo. Consequently to deprive it of the right to have the liquor that it sells in Jackson county carried by an express company C. O. D. to some local option county would constitute a prejudice and disadvantage to such company which would deprive it of a privilege enjoyed by companies engaged in other kinds of business."

Here is food for reflection. Notice, please, that because the state receives a "license fee" for the sale of liquor in Jackson county the men holding this liquor license are entitled to ship the liquor which they sell into local option counties where the people have decided against the sale of intoxicating drinks. The state may then override the wish and will of the people of any county opposed to the liquor-traffic, in order to uphold a business from which it receives revenue!

Was there ever a stronger indictment against the license system than this decision of our Attorney-General? The decision, too, let us say, seems quite logical and consistent. If the state legalizes a business and receives from it a license fee it would seem that it puts itself under obligations to protect that business. But suppose the effects of that business are such that the good citizens in many parts of the state have seen proper to prohibit it within their respective counties, ought the state then to legalize a business so evil in its influence as to work such disaster and ruin, that the good people of the state seek to protect themselves against it? Certainly not. It has no right to the protection enjoyed by "other kinds of business." It curses, others bless and benefit the people. This is the root of the whole matter. It is an iniquitous business, injurious to the welfare of the individual, of the family, and of society, and the state has no moral right to put the seal of legitimacy upon such a traffic. If it does so, it places itself under legal obligations to protect it, even when it overrides the will of counties and communities opposed to it.

How long will it take the law-makers and the courts of this country to see this truth, and to act in accordance with it? Unless our civilization goes backward, it can not be very long.

But our civilization is not going backward, for Jesus Christ is in it, and is leading it forward to a glorious consummation.

Notes and Comments.

The Christian Church in Austin, a suburb of Chicago, has adopted a resolution "prohibiting any money-getting function under the auspices of the church and declaring a higher plane of spirituality could be attained thereby." The pastor, George A. Campbell, in explaining this action, is reported as saying:

> "It will give the ladies more time for charitable work. It will increase volunteer gifts, and put the responsibility of the church upon the members, and stop the running of an opposition to bakeries and restaurants. The ladies were forever talking about bazaars, suppers and entertainments instead of religious subjects. 'Money functions,' said the pastor, 'were branded at our meeting this morning as stomach religion and mercenary religion.' "

The president of a bank in Indiana clipped the foregoing and addressed it to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST asking, "Does the inclosed correspond with your views?" We answer most emphatically, it does. We believe it to be a poor financial policy to resort to these methods of money-getting, and, worst of all, we believe it to be detrimental to the spiritual interests of the church to rely on these schemes for getting the necessary funds to carry on its operations. The grace of giving, which brings a spiritual blessing to the giver, is one that needs to be cultivated, and direct giving is the best method of cultivating this grace.

But having said this much concerning the advisability of churches engaging in money-making functions, it is only just and proper to say that sometimes under exceptional conditions the ladies of the church, or in a community where we have no church, and where the male members are few and unable or unwilling to give, are compelled to face the question of doing something to secure funds for the church or to see the cause go down. They sometimes give suppers or make garments or other useful articles with their own hands and hold bazaars with the view of helping the church. We can not find it in our heart to censure these Christian women who give expression to their loyalty to the church and their religious interest by doing such things. The thing which we wish to discountenance, and which we hope to see discontinued, is the resort to fairs and festivals for money-making purposes on the part of churches whose members are able to give directly all the money necessary for carrying forward the operations of the church. It is direct instead of indirect giving that we would advocate as the best means of spiritual growth and the surest path to financial success in church management.

The personal experience which Brother Shelnutt relates in his "Georgia Notes," concerning his change of views on the subject of federation is that of hundreds, yea thousands of others who, having a wrong impression of what it is and what it aims at, were opposed to it as inimical to our plea for Christian union, but who, on coming to a true understanding of its spirit and purpose, see in it a powerful agency for hastening the realization of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples. This open-mindedness to truth is the glory of the Disciples of Christ, and if they should ever lose that, their history as a reformatory movement is ended and "Ichabod" may be written across what remains.

The very zeal for the principles which distinguish us as a religious body often leads our members to oppose certain movements and measures, the nature and spirit of which they do not understand. As soon, however, as they come to see that the principle, measure or movement, is in perfect harmony with what we are seeking to accomplish, their open-mindedness and love for the truth cause them to fall in heartily with what they had at one time suspected and opposed. This at least is the rule. It is perfectly proper that we should be thus zealous in behalf of principles which we hold in trust, but we must see to it that our zeal for the cause we plead is not without knowledge, and especially that it is not without love, which is even greater than knowledge. The Jews were looking for the Messiah, but rejected him when he came, because he did not come in the way they supposed he would come. It would indeed be a lamentable mistake if a religious body, championing the cause of Christian union, should reject it, because it comes in a guise somewhat different from that which we expected it to wear.

In a kindly notice of the Editor's book on "Christian Union" the Baptist Argus of Louisville, says:

> Dr. J. H. Garrison, Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis, is making a statesmanlike and Christian effort to restate the positions of the Christian church with a view to Christian union. This book is his formal effort in that direction. If the Christian denomination would appoint a commission in accord with Dr. Garrison to approach the Baptist denomination with a view to a combined restatement we think something of notable moment would happen. This book is a historical exposition of the question involved. When the author comes to the history of his own people his book grows particularly interesting.

If the Baptist denomination had only such newspaper organs as the Baptist Argus, The Examiner, and some others, and our own religious papers were all like-minded, "something of notable moment would happen" very soon. But it is going to happen anyway, sooner or later, for God reigns.

We like this manifestation of esprit de corps from our esteemed neighbor, the Central Baptist:

> The religious weekly can not afford to be shabby. Least of all can Baptist papers afford to lag behind. Baptists do not have to be content with inferior boards or colleges or books or papers. It is a criticism they ought to resent, and one which they will resent, to tell them that any sort of old print is good enough for them. We have no right to discredit our cause and our people in our own eyes and in the eyes of the world by worshipping in tumbled down meeting houses or by handing out papers that are below the common standard in the world of periodicals.

It is interesting to note the fact that our Baptist and Presbyterian brethren in St. Louis have caught the spirit of simultaneous evangelistic meetings and are now making plans for such meetings some time in the near future. It is an encouraging fact that the spirit of evangelism is rising in all the churches, and along with this fact, there is another not less encouraging, namely: the tendency in all the churches to conform more closely to the simple New Testament method of evangelization. A distinguished Baptist evangelist recently held a series of meetings in this city in which there were several conversions, and his method of receiving the confession of those who came forward was substantially that which prevails in our own evangelistic services.

We had a call recently from an able and widely known minister and lecturer, in one of the so-called "liberal" churches who, in the course of a religious conversation, told us his heart was hungering to preach the Christ of the New Testament, and that he was tired of the thin air of human philosophy and speculation which he had been breathing, and his face was "steadfastly turned toward Jerusalem." It is marvelous —this modern hungering and thirsting after the Christ of Galilee. What an infinite advantage have they whose sole mission it is to preach Christ to a weary, heart-hungering world! "And I," said Jesus, "if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto me." Let us lift him up in our pulpits, in our daily lives, in art, in music, in government, and in all that makes up our Christian civilization.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Each season of the year has its own perplexities and cares. The questions now which cause most anxiety and concern in domestic circles is not how to conciliate Japan in relation to the San Francisco school question, nor the discharge of the colored troops without honor, and not even the question of trusts. These all hold a subordinate place now to the main question, which is, What does he or she want for a Christmas present? It is complimentary to human nature that very few are concerned about what they are going to receive, and are anxious only about what they are going to give. They want to give something and they would like to give something appropriate, and that would be appreciated by the receiver. What that particular thing is in each particular case is just now causing a good many people to lie awake of nights. The Easy Chair would be glad to help its readers in their Christmas troubles as in all others, but can only do so in the way of general suggestions. One of these is to avoid costly gifts, as a rule, which to most of us would prove burdensome. Let us not make Christmas a festival to be dreaded on account of the exorbitant demands it makes upon our purses. The value of a Christmas gift, as we all know, does not consist in its cost price, but in the spirit of friendship which it expresses. Then, again, we can not give gifts to all the people whom we admire and esteem. That would bankrupt most of us. Once more, may we suggest that if we remember the poor and the destitute, our gifts are more certain to be appreciated and it is far easier in such cases to decide what to give. A broken, soiled and castaway doll will give more joy to some poor child, than a diamond or a necklace would give to the rich.

We are conscious, however, of having evaded the main question in the foregoing. What shall we give? Can we help each other to solve this problem? Some people have an intuitive gift in this direction, but others have not. The Easy Chair belongs to the latter class, and usually falls back on its lady friends for advice. This is a suggestion which many of our male readers might use with profit. It is a custom in some households to converse very freely in the weeks preceding Christmas about their needs, in which suggestions are thrown out not without a purpose to guide other members of the family in their selection of gifts. These suggestions are always welcomed and mental notes made of them. We have heard of a clever device between husbands and wives for insuring mutual satisfaction in their gifts. Each one purchases for the other some article which he wishes for himself or herself, with the understanding that they would exchange gifts. We do not recommend this method, as it is too utilitarian in its spirit for real gift-making. The more our Christmas-giving is limited to little love-tokens and made the expression of sincere, kindly feeling, the more they will accord with the true spirit of Christmas, and the more joy they will give, both to those who give and to those who receive. And the more unselfish our gifts are—that is, giving where we can not hope to receive in return—the more Christ-like it will be, and the more happiness we shall get out of it. Let the spirit of him whose birth is commemorated by the Christmas festival rule all our giving and all our conduct, if we would get most out of the Christmas season.

"I had not thought of it before," writes one of our readers, "but since reading your editorial on 'The Religious Newspaper Problem,' I am sure it is true that by patronizing your publishing house in its Sunday-school supplies and book business we are making it possible for you to furnish us such a paper as The Christian-Evangelist at the low price at which you are offering it." We have no doubt there are many of our friends who fail to connect in their minds the two things which our brother mentions above, as having just seen. In a letter just received from a minister whose name is familiar throughout our brotherhood, he says: "I would despair of the future of our movement if it were not for the commanding influence of The Christian-Evangelist, and I think thousands of others feel as I do." While we feel that this is complimentary to the paper we do not quote it for that reason. Such a sentiment, often expressed in letters and in conversation, fills us with a profound sense of our unworthiness and of our responsibility. We do not believe the future of the great cause we plead is dependent on any one religious journal, for God is over all and he raises up agents and agencies for carrying forward his truth. We do believe, however, most profoundly, that those ideals and principles for which The Christian-Evangelist stands are essential to the future usefulness and success of our movement. Now this is the point: If this be true, as thousands of our brethren believe it is true, there are some duties and obligations involved in it that the brotherhood ought to recognize. Just in proportion as we receive their co-operation and patronage in all the lines of our publication business, can we propagate those truths and principles, and realize those ideals, which they and we alike believe to be essential to the well-being of the cause we plead.

Jehovah said to his ancient people,

> "Oh that my people would hearken unto me,
> That Israel would walk in my way!
> I would soon subdue their enemies,
> And turn my hand against their adversaries."—Psalm 81:13, 14.

God had chosen Israel for a certain work, and if they had been true to their divine calling how much mightier their influence would have been in the world! But God has chosen other peoples in later times to execute his will and carry forward his work. In proportion as they have been loyal to him who has called them, their work has prospered; and in so far as they have departed from his counsel, weakness and confusion have resulted. We who plead for a united church on the New Testament basis of fellowship, believe we have been called of God to this work. He is saying to us, no less than he said to ancient Israel, that if we will walk in his ways and do the work which he has called us to do, he will subdue our adversaries and lead us on to triumph. The only possible failure that can come to us must come through unfaithfulness to God, and the consequent cutting off of his blessing. To his dull and unresponsive people of old Jehovah said, "Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it." God prefers to be generous in his gifts to us. We are not limited in our asking. He wishes us to open our mouths wide that he may fill them. We must expect large things from God. We must plan large things, and work for large things. According to our faith so will it be unto us.

All day the sun has hid his face behind the clouds and the shadowed earth reflects the somberness of the sky. How often it happens that these gray days have their counterpart in our own spirits. It is well at such times to remember that "somewhere the sun is shining," and that it is likely to shine again out of our own sky. If it be better, as the wise man hath said, to visit the house of mourning than the house of mirth, no doubt these somber days minister to our deeper needs better than continuous sunshine. Among other things, they teach us that the roots of our joy and gladness are not to find their exclusive or chief nourishment in our external environment, no matter how pleasant it may be, but in the consciousness of seeking daily to do the work which God has given us to do, and in filling the place in life which he intends us to fill. One who feels himself thus fitted into those eternal relationships and fulfilling his alloted task, may cherish a feeling of joy even in the cloudy days, and sing his songs in the night. It is in the nature of faith to paint every cloud that hangs above us a golden hue, or beautify them at least with a silver lining.

There is probably no more inspiring chapter in the annals of missionary movements than the rise and progress of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Its "Day," which has just passed, has been more generally recognized among the churches probably than ever before, and this is as it should be, for no missionary organization among us better deserves our confidence and assistance. The enthusiasm combined with practical wisdom which marks their history is giving a new impetus to all departments of our work. It is emancipating, developing and glorifying our Christian womanhood and making it a most powerful factor, as Christ intended it should be, in the redemption of the world. A child is said to have made this criticism on "Christian" in Bunyan's immortal work: "I like 'Christiana' better than 'Christian,' because he went to the celestial city alone, while she took the children with her." The beauty about the work of our Christian women is that they are taking the children with them through the juniors, and in the home circle, in their march to the city of God.

"Is There a Missing Link?"

[The attention of a number of leading brethren having been called to the editorial in last week's Christian-Evangelist under the above title, with a request for an expression of opinion on the subject, the following replies have been received in time for this issue. Others will follow in later issues, and we will welcome a brief expression of opinion on this question from any of our readers who may feel an interest in it.—Editor.]

By W. F. Richardson.

Inasmuch as our general convention has already considered in its annual sessions such diverse interests as those of missions, education, benevolence and Christian union, it seems to me needless to form another organization for that purpose. Rather let us so amend our constitution as to recognize the competency of the general convention of the A. C. M. S. to consider these and other matters, carefully guarding against the consideration of questions of the faith of the church, or the fundamentals in practice. By all means it ought to be possible for us to speak in behalf of our brotherhood on such questions as that of the closer co-operation of the people of God in common moral and social movements for the betterment of our race.

Kansas City, Mo.

By Allan B. Philputt.

I believe there should be a delegate body representing the churches, whose function it would be to pass on questions such as you mention in your editorial. The present acephalous condition of our general conventions has obtained long enough. There are times when the decent and dignified thing to do is to pass on a question and we should not any longer have to make the humiliating confession that we have no tribunal or body competent to do it. We are the only people in the world organized for any purpose whatever, that I know of, without such a representative assembly or head. The details can be worked out so as to safeguard all dangers, and we can still retain our mass conventions where all the people may come; but for certain purposes we need a representative and responsible delegate body. As I see it now, this end can be gained without creating an additional organization, by so amending the constitution of the A. C. M. S. as to provide for what is desired.

Indianapolis, Ind.

By Herbert L. Willett.

I have long felt that the limitations under which our national conventions are organized do not permit of any representative expression of sentiment on subjects which may be of as vital interest to our work as are those of missionary and philanthropic character. I am satisfied that one of two things must transpire: Either we must widen the scope of the missionary conventions, especially that of the American Christian Missionary Society, so that it may consider matters of general Christian teaching as part of its program, or else there must be organized upon a separate foundation a convention which will be thoroughly representative of all the interests of the brotherhood. I see no reason why the former of these two courses is not the better one. There are probably few questions likely to arise at any particular time demanding serious consideration, beyond those which concern missionary work. If, therefore, the constitution of the American Christian Missionary Society can be so amended or interpreted as to include matters of this character, there is no need for further organizations. If, however, it can not, then there must be some plan devised, as we found necessary in the case of the Congress. As the brotherhood grows in diversity of interests and activities we are in great need of some opportunity for expression of opinion on questions which are neither specifically matters of missionary, educational and philanthropic nature, such as the conventions now handle, nor those of doctrinal and social interest such as the Congress discusses. It would seem unfortunate to multiply machinery merely to meet this demand, provided it can be met by a more elastic arrangement of our convention interests. If this is impossible, then the new organization must be projected.

Chicago.

By Robert Moffett.

I have read with much interest your editorial entitled, "Is There a Missing Link?" I am in favor of giving the American Christian Missionary Society the old and well established liberty to consider questions which have to do with the advancement and prosperity of the cause of Christ. I take it for granted that in changing the constitution, the Norfolk convention will not discard state delegations. A by-law can fix the matter beyond dispute that all such subjects as temperance education, Christian union, civic righteousness and temperance shall be considered as germane and can be turned over to these state delegations, if necessary, in a separate meeting, but their resolutions not to be binding on the local churches. If the Norfolk convention should go back on the numerous precedents already established, I would favor an organization to be called "The American Disciples' Union," to give voice to any measures which have alliance with whatever makes for righteousness. As a religious body we can not afford to withhold hand or voice for the world's uplift.

Cleveland, Ohio.

[We call attention to the foregoing comments on the editorial, "Is There a Missing Link." It will be noticed that while there is a slight divergence of opinion concerning the best method of reaching the end desired there is perfect unanimity of sentiment on the essential principle involved, namely: that we must have a representative body competent to deal in a purely advisory and non-legislative way with all questions which have an important bearing upon our present and future well-being, and which may properly come before a deliberative body. That is the point which The Christian-Evangelist has emphasized. Whether this end be reached by such a revision of the constitution of the American Christian Missionary Society as will place beyond question its competency, in general convention assembled, to deal with all such matters of general interest, or by the calling of a separate convention, is not a question of vital importance. But that we must have such a representative body to act upon great questions affecting the whole brotherhood, and having to do with the progress of the kingdom of God, admits of no reasonable doubt. It would be a most anomalous and undignified position for any great religious movement to occupy, to plead its inability to discuss, and take any advisory action upon questions of great public concern, because it has no representative body authorized to give an expression of sentiment! And if we were to add to this the statement that we were afraid to trust ourselves to consider such questions of general interest in convention lest we be tempted to legislate and bind the churches by our ecclesiastical edicts, the confession would be as humiliating as it would be ridiculous and unfounded.—Editor.]

By F. D. Power.

That at some time and place other questions beside missions, pure and simple, need consideration by a representative gathering of our people, there can be no doubt. These matters are constantly coming up, and it seems hardly fair to expect our much overworked editors to settle them all infallibly. The Congress answers a purpose, but is not sufficiently representative, as from the very nature of things we can not assemble in large and representative numbers twice yearly. Our great missionary gatherings bring together the largest numbers possible, and the men that lead in these meetings could speak for the churches on other great interests that concern our people. Why may there not be a day, or two days, added to the time of the conventions, which shall be devoted to other matters than missions? Then the consideration of these matters, and any action thereon, could not be chargeable to the missionary societies, and would in no way interfere with their usefulness. We desire harmony among the brethren on all measures, and a conference of this kind would aid greatly to the unity of the brotherhood and clear up many misunderstandings.

By E. L. Powell.

Referring to the editorial in this week's Christian-Evangelist, it seems to me that a representative convention apart from those of the missionary societies would be more desirable than revising the constitution of the A. C. M. S. in order to make it practicable in dealing with questions other than those which are strictly missionary. Of course, such a representative convention would have no binding authority on any of our churches. It would be purely advisory and to this extent helpful. It would give to those who should be sent as delegates to the convention an opportunity to express themselves on very many questions with which our people should deal. I should like a convention in which the very largest liberty of utterance could be granted, and one not too formal in its exercises. We have not the time at our national conventions, as at present arranged, to do anything more than carry out a definitely prepared program. I should think that such a convention as you suggest would be largely attended, and would make its influence felt throughout the entire brotherhood.

I like the idea of another convention separate and distinct from those which assemble on the occasions of our national meetings.

Problems of Evangelization

Being the Second Part of the Address before the Buffalo Convention on "Disciples and Evangelism."

By J. P. Lichtenberger

That we are facing new problems in present day evangelism is apparent. The times are different. We are now in the 20th century. "We go forth conscious that the Faith confronts the civilization not of a hundred, of fifty, of ten years ago." This is the sublime and awful present.

The Evangelization of the City.

In the new evangelization the city is the centre. It is the product of present social and economic conditions. It is constantly assuming larger proportions and influence. In 1790, 3.4 per cent of our people lived in cities of 8,000 and over; in 1890, 29.2 per cent; to-day over 35 per cent, while in the North Atlantic division more than 60 per cent. The rate of growth (Weber, "Growth of Cities"), increases from the rural districts, which tend to decrease, to the metropolis. Small towns are about stationary. Large cities are making rapid growth while the cities of the first rank are marvelously increasing. Recent attempts to show that an opposite tendency has set in are unscientific and abortive. They are but eddies in the stream of population flowing into the cities, or else they prove to be merely movements toward the suburbs of the greatest cities. There is no reason to think the present trend will change under present economic conditions.

The modern city is the test and opportunity for the church. Its conditions are new and untried. Many have considered them inimical to the progress of Christianity, and not a few have been willing that we should turn hopelessly to the stationary or diminishing populations of the village and country as our field because they offer larger present gains. To do this is to abandon the real issue. It is to concede the impotency of our evangel and that it stands helpless on the threshold of the new civilization.

WHAT CHRIST SAID.

I said, "Let me walk in the fields,"
He said, "No, walk in the town."
I said, "There are no flowers there."
He said, "No flowers, but a crown."

I said, "But the skies are black;
There is nothing but noise and din."
And He wept as He sent me back;
"There is more," He said: "there is sin."

I said, "But the air is thick,
And fogs are veiling the sun."
He answered, "Yet souls are sick,
And souls in the dark undone."

I said, "I shall miss the light,
And friends will miss me, they say."
He answered, "Choose to-night
If I am to miss you, or they."

I pleaded for time to be given.
He said, "Is it hard to decide?
It will not seem hard in heaven
To have followed the steps of your Guide."
—George MacDonald.

To concede that the cities are ultimately unfavorable and that modern civilization is detrimental to the cause of Christ is to surrender faith in the power of the Gospel. If this be true, then the Church must inevitably decline with the growth of cities and the march of progress. It is to put the church on the defensive and consign it to the task of counteracting an increasingly hostile environment. It is to impose the church against progress.

Such are not the facts. Such is not the fate of the Gospel against which the gates of Hades shall not prevail. The church is not to be repudiated by the best product of the civilization it has been the most instrumental in creating. Brethren, it is time we cease beating ourselves against invisible and imaginary barriers like a frightened bird in its cage, but with more intelligence and faith apply ourselves to the solution of the problem. The seeming obstacles in the cities are neither essential nor permanent and constitute the challenge of the church to improve them. Shelley said "Hell is a city much like London," and we have made a program of his pessimism. Canon Freemantle uttered the word of wisdom for the age in reference to the city when he said "It is a vain thing to go back upon human progress. The industrial revolution which has made our great cities, and which through them supplies the needs of mankind, is part of God's providence; and what we have to do, the real task of our generation, is to face the problems which the city life presents, applying to them the light which the Bible gives us, and determining, so far as in us lies, and by the power of God and of Christ, that London and New York shall not be as Babylon, but as the New Jerusalem."

Where has our evangelism won its greatest victories? According to the statistics of our Year-Book, in ten cities of the first rank, (Buffalo, Chicago, Cleveland, Des Moines, Kansas City, Pittsburg, St. Louis, Washington, Los Angeles, and New York), we have grown in ten years from 41 to 107 churches, and from 11,424 to 32,353 communicants—a growth of 183 per cent, while in the country at large the growth in the same decade did not exceed 60 per cent.

We have the message for the modern city. Let us attack the problem with faith in God, and the Gospel with a heroism worthy of our sires.

Adjustment to Present Conditions.

Precisely in the same manner in which the severest tests of Christianity arise out of the forces which it itself has released, so we as a people are being tested as to our ability to adjust ourselves in the midst of influences to which we have contributed more than any other religious body. If we have been the pioneers in the plea for Christian union we are not to-day its sole advocates. Others have joined us with the enthusiasm of the champions of a new cause. The battle has not been won, nay, in some quarters it has not even been heard that there has been any progress. This is for reasons akin to those prevailing in China, where, we are told, there are millions of Chinese who do not so much as know that there ever was a Japanese-Chinese war, and millions more who think they whipped the Japs. But among the leaders and in the enlightened portions of the kingdom conquests for Christian union have been won and large progress achieved.

In a Christian country, therefore, where the people are neither ignorant nor opposed to our policy our advocacy of it must be different from the plea of 1840.

Our theories are being judged by our practices. Our friends, "the enemy," are estimating the genuineness of our convictions upon the union question by our attitude toward the honest efforts of others to accomplish the same task. They desire to perceive whether our interests are chiefly the kingdom, or the building of a strong religious party; whether Christian union is a passion with us or a denominational slogan. Strange enough to excite the wonder of many outside our ranks and significant enough to create some interest among us, is the fact that practical efforts for the actual accomplishment of Christian union in the last decade, have not arisen with us, but with others whose professions have been less pretentious, while an attitude of unfriendliness has sometimes been perceptible among us. Our tree is being judged by its fruit.

Are we equal to this new test? I think we are, but our hope lies not in the way of a polemic defense of the logic of our position, but in a new wave of evangelistic fervor, not inspired by a party shibboleth, but by the love of Christ for lost men, which shall sweep us forward with all who share that love, to the conquest of the world for him. Let us, then, in sympathy with every worthy effort to unite God's people for the sake of the world's redemption, join hands, touch shoulders, keep step with the ongoing of the great army of God, and prove the sincerity of our profession and the righteousness of our plea.

For this we need educated evangelists as we need an educated ministry. Too long a zeal of God, and ability to exhort, have been considered the chief requisites of the evangelist. Our colleges are rendering a service for which we are not adequately compensating them, either in appreciation or means, for the character of men they have trained and are training for our evangelists. We are coming more and more to consecrate our best trained men for this holy service to-day. We have happily fallen upon a time, when the once opprobrious title of "Dr." may be worn with perfect propriety by the peer of our evangelists, and it has not seemingly detracted from his power. The plea for an educated ministry has now become a universally recognized need with us. I plead earnestly, brethren, the same necessity for the evangelist who shall represent us in this all important work.

The Wider Scope of the Term.

Another problem confronting our evangelism is our frightful waste and loss. Our statisticians tell us we have a gross increase of 100,000 per year, while we have a net increase of 31,000. Many churches reporting large increase in evangelistic meetings show no larger membership as the result. Much of this loss is unavoidable. Nor do I think the difficulty lies in the over-emphasis of numbers. Men who decry numbers are usually men who have few additions. To win the multitudes is our mission. The cry of "Not numbers, but souls," is a thoughtless and foolish alarm. Our evangel is for the world. The man who fears numbers lacks the spirit of Pentecost. Furthermore, I am a pastor, and have not forgotten that the care of the numbers rests heavily on the pastors. I do not seek to escape responsibility. Still, the vital matter has not been touched.

The connotation of our term "Evangelism" is too narrow. Often the evangelist turns over to the pastor a host of "additions" (a much abused word), neither converted nor added to the Lord, and for whom the Lord himself would likely refuse to be responsible. We have no word in our religious vocabulary to define the result of a great meeting. We need a new terminology. Many are not converted, in any ordinary acceptation of that term. They are not added to anything. They simply came forward and immediately slid backward. Moved to their repentence, neither by "the goodness of God" nor by "a godly sorrow," but rather by the emotional appeal of the evangelist and the mental suggestion of the mind of the crowd, they are not prepared for the experience of the "morning after."

What can be done to evade the religious reaction and spiritual dearth which frequently follows in the wake of the great meeting? I answer: Substitute an intelligent Christianization for an over emotional evangelism. See to it that faith in the Divine Person becomes the dynamic in conversion. Let love for him be the compelling force rather than hypnotic suggestion. Inspiration is better than perspiration. The sufferings of Jesus produce a more lasting effect on the heart than the contortions of the evangelist. Transformation of life by Christ's spirit is the object to be attained rather than formal obedience to positive commands. Confession and baptism are essential as initiatory acts, but the ultimate test is not obedience, but "Holiness, without which no man can see God." The final proof of our loyalty in the sight of Jesus is a life invested for humanity, "inasmuch as ye did or did it not to one of the least of these, my brethren." To serve Christ is to serve men. To follow in his steps is to go about doing good. To call him Lord we must do the thing which he says. His mission in the world was not to be baptized, but to do the will of God on earth as it is done in heaven. Formally to make the good confession makes an "addition." Sincerely to obey him as Lord and to live by his spirit constitutes a Christian.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Once more Congress is with us. For three months it is to be on our hands. Congress is our peculiar joy, our annual wonder. From the first Monday in December new faces appear on our streets, new people throng our hotels, new animation stirs our official atmosphere, new turnouts dash along our avenues, new impulses and fads and functions awaken society. The whirl is on and we all enjoy it. The District of Columbia appreciates the nation's aggregation and watches with ever renewed interest the interplay of social and political ambitions, the clash of rival parties, and the sharp contests for the best places in the limelight. In these thirty-one years I have watched the play it has varied little. These mortals are men of like passions with those who preceded them. Solons they are as were their fathers, patriots of the same quality, politicians for the most part, but God reigns still and the government shall live.

It is not presumable that things will be dull. The man who runs things at the other end of the avenue is likely to prevent inertia. He has things to say that will stir as goads the indolent. What if he insists upon the "Nu Spelin'." Some of our representatives have not yet fully mastered the old, and a revision of the dictionary is sure to arouse such standpatters. Tariff revision, the currency, a larger navy, the insular possessions, the big ditch, Smoot, the discharge "without honor" of the negro companies, the Algeciras treaty and the Santo Domingo treaty, the River and Harbor bill, the war cloud over the Japanese and San Francisco, the immigration and ship subsidy questions, the labor bills, the Cuban revolution—everything but the abolition of the traffic in intoxicating drinks, will receive attention and even this will come up in the House, for our Brother Webber of Ohio, is determined to push his bill for prohibition in the District of Columbia. Webber for President would suit us.

There have been some changes. There are many lame ducks, some of whom have been long in the service. My friend, Mr. Wadsworth, of New York, one of the few left of the 47th Congress when I served as chaplain, "Farmer Jim," is allowed to retire. Another man of prominence, but one we could well spare, Babcock of Wisconsin, becomes a private citizen. There are a number from Wisconsin. Grosvenor of Ohio, a grim old warrior of many hard-fought fields, is turned down by his people. Fred Landis is another. New men will come in their places. Three months more and these will pass out of the public eye. The King is dead, long live the King. It is astonishing, after all, how easy it is to drop out of sight, when we have felt the poor world could not get along without us. With all its gratification at the coming of the annual show within its gates, Washington knows but few of these gentlemen, and does not seriously miss the great majority when they retire from service. The makeup of the procession changes, but it is the procession that interests us, and the procession keeps moving. Some of the oldest members went to their last home since the first session of the Fifty-ninth. Among them Hitt and Ketcham of my old flock, the Forty-seventh. They were strong men. Only two or three are left of the Congress I served. Speaker Cannon is one, Keifer is another. As I personally know every member of that House I have watched their careers with interest. They have gone—they have all passed by, and that is only a quarter of a century in the past. The history made since I have known Congress would fill many volumes, and the future promises even greater things.

The President is vigorous enough in his message. There is too much about war for an old-fashioned Quaker, and too little about rum for a latter day Prohibitionist. Social-politics and world-politics are treated well. California is disgruntled, but Nippon is delighted. He begins with corporations and ends with rifle clubs. He pleases the believers in a strong central government, and disgusts the states-rights people. He has been in touch with the Spanish thought recently enough to say "Manana! Manana!" and thinks about many things that "it may best to wait," and "in the near future" tackle them. He is sound on the divorce question, and his dissertations on righteousness, peace, and international unselfishness will meet general approval. He has stirred up the animals to a remarkable degree. The outcome will be watched with eagerness.

Meantime the Kingdom of God advances. Our own Zion is busy. Sunday, December 2, I had the privilege of assisting Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, in laying the corner stone of his Temple. After a good program in the chapel five hundred Sunday-school children paraded and swung the 1700 pound stone in place and buried it in roses and carnations. The Cardinal himself could not have gotten up a prettier spectacle. The new addition to the Temple will cost $3,000 and will be a most attractive edifice. Two years ago I was with this congregation at the corner stone laying of their chapel. Then in the stone they put a list of 237 members and 101 Sunday-school scholars, while in this case the figures are 445 and 626 respectively. Catholics and Protestants, Jews and Gentiles have shared in the good work. The new building will accommodate 1400 people when complete. There are crowds attending the Temple services and constant additions. It is a veritable hive of industry and thoroughly united

The Elderburg Association

[This association is, as Brother Doctor has said, "in its existence and in its component parts a remarkable phenomenon, a portent, perhaps." We began this series of reports of the meeting on the green of the court house, of the twelve preachers of Elderburg in our issue of March 8, 1906. They ran on until early summer when they were discontinued for the time being, owing to the difficulty of finding space for a regular series of articles. The difficulty of finding this space is as great as ever, but we are making an effort to conclude the series because we believe they are well worth while. They discuss problems and situations that effect more or less every church and every preacher and these are presented in a humorous and quaint style. Brother Doctor suggested that the association ought to spend some time each day in the discussion of the topic "Why we are where we are, or what is the matter with us?" An arrangement for carrying his idea into effect was instantly made. Brother Notary and J. P. was appointed to preside at all discussions. Brother Lawyer was appointed official critic and reviewer, while Brother Schoolmaster was made secretary.—EDITOR.]

CHAPTER VIII.

Experiences of Brother Paper-Hanger.

Brother Paper-Hanger was a medium-sized man whose hair, now of a beautiful silver-gray color, had once been a very deep auburn. He had keen, shrewd blue eyes, and whenever he smiled little wrinkles, like marks of parenthesis, appeared at the corners of his eyes and on either side of his mouth. He was a Scotch-Irishman, and he spoke with a slight burr. When he took off his hat before beginning his story, a tuft of white hair stood up aggressively above his forehead.

"I don't mind telling you, gentlemen, that I am in my present state of extinguishment because I have found it easier to guide a paste brush over the church walls than to guide my own tongue in the pulpit. I'm not without pretensions to scholarship, as some of you know. I have had debates with Mormons, Spiritualists, Universalists, and divers other heretical persons, and I've no reason to be ashamed of the outcome of those battles. I admit that I have met, in my public discussions, men who were my equals in logic and my superiors in eloquence; but for roasting a respected adversary over a slow fire of irony, or for filling his skin full of the barbed arrows of wit, sarcasm, innuendo, I am the peer of any man of my generation.

"Though I have never preached to empty benches, in any place where I have labored, it is a singular fact that I could never hold a pulpit long. 'My hair is gray, but not with years;' and this premature grayness is due to the hot water in which I have lived almost constantly, from the first day I entered the ministry until the day I left it. I perceive, brethren, that what the apostle foretold has come to pass: The so-called Christians of our day have itching ears, and they will no longer endure sound doctrine. Yet sound doctrine is the only thing I would ever consent to preach. I, too, Brother Lawyer, am one of those unfortunates, one of those embryonic martyr-heroes to whom the Lord has added keenness of vision to discern evil, and from whom he has subtracted that nice, wise, discreet power to sugar-coat the truth so that men shall swallow it 'unbeknownst' to themselves, so characteristic of the popular preachers of the day. Set me front to front with mine adversary, and I smite—suddenly, swiftly, unsparingly, without preliminary flourish of trumpets or exchange of cartel.

"I need not, I suppose, catalog for your information the manifest, crying evils of our time: drunkenness, gambling, prostitution, corruption in public and private life; nor need I call your attention to the cowardice of Christians in the face of them. In every congregation where I have worked there have been people, few or many, who needed admonition on these subjects. Toward such people my attitude has been that of Solomon: 'How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? When wilt thou arise out of thy sleep?' I have prodded such sluggards with all spiritual implements at hand; prodded them till the blood came, sometimes, but it was for their good. Thank goodness, it was never possible for any weak-kneed professor to go to sleep under my preaching when once I had got him located. For he could never foresee, no matter what my subject might be, what sudden, red-hot thunderbolt, barbed with wit or sarcasm might be aimed at his guilty heart. Many a time have I seen the unhappy one turn pale and writhe; and let him seek to conceal the wound as he might, I would know that his heart's blood was flowing. You do not know, brethren, if you have never given attention to the matter, how abundant are the opportunities for that sort of execution open to any man with a fair wit and a reasonably good command of our language—if only he will cultivate firmness of heart and a sure aim. For example:

"At Wayback there were old Brother and Sister Willyum, who used tobacco; at Wollyville there was Brother Bourbon, who had once signed a petition for a saloon; at Speedy there was Sister Uppity, who gave balls and progressive card parties; at Degeneracy there were several young people who danced and certain old people who kept private demijohns. Ah, me! the white-hot Gospel thunderbolts I have fired at each one of them, without ever failing to score the bull's-eye! I launched truth, be it remembered, truth and not falsehood, every time; truth from the great arsenal of truth. Observe now: Every one of those people, instead of becoming convicted of sin, instead of amending his life, quit coming to church; each of them had influence enough to stir up a party against me; and the influence that each had he used to injure me! Am I not justified when I say the time is come when the people who call themselves Christians will no longer endure sound doctrine?

The defeat which finally disheartened me was when I entered into a fight against the saloons, brothels, and gambling hells in Flodden. Have you, any of you, ever tried to move a dish of moral skim-milk to action, in an enterprise like that? If so, you know something of the weaknesses, imbecilities, skulkings, and cowardices that may suddenly develop in men and women who should be veterans of the Cross. The man who has the job of leading that undisciplined rabble of incompetents against the wary, unscrupulous, well-organized, well-appointed hosts of evil, is not to be envied. Certainly, in this fight, as in most other fights of that kind, there were many true, brave, resourceful people; but the work of overcoming the cowardice of the cowards and the folly of the fools so occupied the time and attention of the capable few that they had but little time left to devote to the common enemy.

"I cannot say I have been wary of entering into quarrels, as old Mr. Polonius advises, yet being in, I have tried to so bear myself that the enemy might beware of me. In this particular battle I bore myself like a valiant man and true; fought with pen, tongue, and (once) with my bare knuckles; fought it from the pulpit, on the stump,

A FRIEND'S ADVICE.

Something Worth Listening To.

A young Nebr. man was advised by a friend to eat Grape-Nuts because he was all run down from a spell of fever. He tells the story:

"Last spring I had an attack of fever that left me in a very weak condition. I had to quit work; had no appetite, was nervous and discouraged.

"A friend advised me to eat Grape-Nuts, but I paid no attention to him and kept getting worse as time went by.

"I took many kinds of medicine but none of them seemed to help me. My system was completely run down, my blood got out of order from want of proper food, and several very large boils broke out on my neck. I was so weak I could hardly walk.

"One day mother ordered some Grape-Nuts and induced me to eat some. I felt better and that night rested fine. As I continued to use the food every day, I grew stronger steadily and now have regained my former good health. I would not be without Grape-Nuts as I believe it is the most health-giving food in the world." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

in the press. Well, we were whipped. We were defeated because the tie of party was stronger with some Christian voters than any plea we could make for civic righteousness. Among these voters was an elder of our congregation. This man did actually try to control nominations in his party so that decent men might be put up as candidates. Bless your life, the wise ones in that party just played with this good man; snowed him under ten deep. Yet he went on and voted for and with the gang that had routed him. When it was all over I fired a parting shot through the columns of a local paper. (Five cents a line, one insertion.) I fired it in the form of a song. I believe I can repeat it from memory:

SINGULAR SONG OF A SUBDUED SAINT.

(Apologies to Savitar.)

(Air.—"Mountains of Hepsidam.")

With the east wind at large in his whiskers,
(Ho, the storm-wind Euroclydon!)
The church-member old stood alone in the cold
And sang as the gale howled on—Sang thus as the gale howled on:—
"This here ain't no song of no sixpence,
Nor a song of a tank full of rye;
But the theme of these wails as I'm running these scales,
Is the boys and the party and I.

(Chorus after each verse:

I'm innocuous, tame, inefficient,
When it comes to affairs of state:
I am flaccid, obese, and torpid;
And I'm classed as an invertebrate.)

"There are statesmen abroad in this nation,
Wise to most things on land or on sea;
Yet I venture to bet you ain't never met
Any statesman aware of me.

"You're supposed to be nice where a gal is,—
Yes; you have to walk-chalk with your wife,
But you're free to make free with yours truly, you see,
'Cause I never engage in strife.

"I'm saddle-broke, bridle-wise, gentle,
And I shore seldom balks or kicks:
But I'm aye in a fix when invited to mix
Religion with pol-i-tics.

"Yes, yes; as a large tax-payer
I am back of the whole shebeen;
But the dough-faced gossoon who runs the saloon
Attends to the party machine.

"No; they don't mind me—I'm a Christian;
My work is to fast and to pray
And to dig up the stuff for the tough and the rough,
To 'blow' on election day."

"You may not think much of this, as poetry, brethren, but I assure you that it was much discussed in Flodden—created there the literary sensation of the year. It also was a contributing cause to my resignation as pastor of that congregation. The elder of whom I have spoken was pleased to consider himself satirized in that poem; some of his friends in the church and some of my enemies outside of the church encouraged him in the notion. Taken along with my other fearless utterances in the course of that campaign, those verses got me into a little of the hottest hot water I have ever been in. A saloon-keeper there chose to identify himself as the 'dough-faced gossoon' of the poem. He assaulted me one day, so that I had to defend myself with the arm of flesh. A result of that encounter was the appearance of my name in a daily paper, under large, black headlines. A more or less witty reporter characterized the affray as 'The second battle of Flodden field, only, in this case, he said, the battle was not between the English and the Scots, but between the Irish and the Dutch.

Of course you easily guess what happened. A pressure was brought to bear on the church board by my enemies in the congregation, and the board could not, or would not, resist the pressure. Thev respected me, they said, believed me to be sincere, etc. Other churches, hearing of my troubles at Flodden, fought shy of me. Fortunately for me, there was, about that time, an opening for an artistic paper-hanger in Elderburg. I leave my patrons to say how well I have filled that opening.

under the pastor's leadership. Numerous societies and lines of work keep every member busy. There is a Bible Seminary with sixty students. There is an orphanage work with twenty children who are wards of the Temple. There is the Tribune home for working girls. There is a living link missionary in Miss Edna P. Dale at Wuhu, China. Peter has no time to play golf, though a Scotchman by descent, and yet he is like an enthusiastic golf player of whom the story is related that one day with an older man, as they wended their way homeward from the links, the older enthusiast said: "We have had a fine day, laddie, a great day. Shall we play tomorrow?" "Weel, I had arranged to be married, but I can put it off," said the younger. Peter has no time even to get married. His centennial aim is 1000 in the membership of the Temple, 1000 in the school, 100 in the Seminary, two living links on the foreign field. Peter has served in Baltimore for fifteen years, and three churches tell the story. Perhaps his only recreation is to act as chaplain of the St. Andrew's Society of the city, an organization of men from "the land o' cakes," or their descendants, for which he has been chosen three times in succession. He is a good representative of the fisherman and enjoys Acts II.

Our other churches in Baltimore are prospering. B. A. Abbott, C. M. Kreidler and E. C. Baker helped in the corner stone ceremonies. The last is a recent addition through Brother Abbott's preaching from another communion, and is in charge of the Calhoun Street work. Washington is not idle. W. G. Oram, late of Brooklyn, has accepted a call to our H Street Church and is already on the field. B. E. Utz is rendering excellent service at the Ninth Street Church. J. E. Stuart had a fine meeting with L. D. Riddell as evangelist and the Fifteenth Street Church is growing steadily. Vermont Avenue has taken on its winter aspect. The Sunday-school under the able leadership of E. A. Gongwer, is in a lively contest with that of the First Church, Philadelphia, and the Quaker city, where they do not eat snails because they cannot catch them, is stirring.

Some Things.

Did you forget last Lord's day that your Savior had said "Do this in remembrance of me"? It is as if this request is repeated to you every week.

Did you forgive that brother who had sinned against you before you asked your heavenly Father to forgive you? If not you would better go again.

Are you on the committee "To secure the pastor's resignation"? If so, do you know how to do your work? Never give up until you bring in a favorable report. Verily, you will have your reward. Part of your reward will come now, for you will gain your end and drive the pastor out of town. But part of your reward you will have to wait for, but it is sure. The Lord never forgets.

An elder has been heard in a prayer-meeting apologizing for, and defending the licensing of saloons. His political party is committed to license. This is why. What ought to be done to him? What will the Lord do with him?

"PROUD AND GLAD"

Because Mother Looked So Well After Quitting Coffee.

An Ohio woman was almost distracted with coffee dyspepsia and heart trouble.

Like thousands of others, the drug in coffee—caffeine—was slowly but steadily undermining her nervous system and interfering with natural digestion of food.

"For 30 years," she writes, "I have used coffee. Have always been sickly—had heart trouble and dyspepsia with ulcers in stomach and mouth so bad sometimes, I was almost distracted and could hardly eat a thing for a week.

"I could not sleep for nervousness, and when I would lie down at night I'd belch up coffee and my heart would trouble me. At last, when I would want to drink coffee, it would gag me. It was like poison to me. I was thin—only weighed 125 lbs., when I quit coffee and began to use Postum.

"From the first day that belching and burning in my stomach stopped. The Postum went down so easy and pleasant. I could sleep as soundly as anyone and, after the first month, whenver I met any friends they would ask me what was making me so fleshy and look so well.

"Sometimes, before I could answer quick enough, one of the children or my husband would say, 'Why, that is what Postum is doing for her'—they were all so proud and glad.

"When I recommend it to anyone I always tell them to follow directions in making Postum, as it is not good to taste if weak, but fine when it is boiled long enough to get the flavor and rich brown color." The Psychology of Baptism

By W. J. Lhamon

In the October number of "Religious Education" John Dashell Stoops, Ph.D a professor in Iowa College, Grinnell, Iowa, presents an article under the caption "The Psychological Basis of Religious Nurture."

Among other suggestions of value one finds the following: There is a view of religion and salvation according to which they are the gifts of the church through her sacraments. This is the institutional method of salvation. The church has baptized the man—therefore he is saved. Or, the church has bestowed extreme unction—therefore the dying one is saved.

This method, Professor Stoops says, "fails to take account of the fact, which is absolutely vital, that religion springs out of the fundamental instincts of the mind itself. The church is not a means of bringing religion from some outside source to the individual; it is rather the expression of a common religious experience. The rite of baptism, accordingly, must be regarded as a symbol of an inner transition of experience, a fully conscious giving up of self to the divine life. There is implied a development of will sufficient to enable the individual to understand the nature of the transition through which he is passing. Infant baptism belongs to the institutional or sacramental theory. The baptism of Jesus, symbolizing the personal consecration of his adolescent self to the Kingdom of God is the ideal type of true baptism."

This is putting in a psychological way what we have been saying all along in our Christological way. It is comforting indeed to see twentieth century psychology rising up to confirm first century theology. Is infant baptism coming under the ban of science as it has been under that of Scripture? Then its day is practically past. And adult baptism also, as a mere sacramental conveyance of salvation, must pass out of our thought and teaching. Baptism, real baptism, must be an act of the soul rather than of the church; it must be psychological. It must spring from the enlightened, believing, responsive heart. It must not be an imposition of the church, but an inspiration of the child of God to respond to the will of God.

Books That Have Interested Me

I have been especially interested in Brierly's books this year. My regret is that I did not find him earlier. Why? Well, who can put an answer to such a question as that! I like Brierly because I like him, that's all. If I were to add, because he is provocative of thought, incisive in style, fresh and vigorous and unconventional and free, my neighbor might read the book and truthfully say: "It seems not so to me." So after all it's a question of taste, a fundamental matter of palate. I like Brierly. He has helped me. No doubt many have already tasted him and know. Books are like soup. My friend likes bean soup. I abhor it. Every man to his liking.

George H. Combs.

I have read the following books this year, but I haven't time now to tell you why they have interested me: "Immanence of God" (Bowne), "Rational Living" (King), "Life of Gladstone," two volumes, (John Morley), "Jesus Christ and Christian Character" (Peabody), "Old Testament Criticism" (Orr), "Old Testament Religion" (Kent), "Strength and Weakness of Christian Science," "Primitive Traits in Revivals" (Davenport), "Finality of the Christian Religion" (Foster).

James M. Philputt.

The two books that have helped me most are Stalker's "Trial and Death of Jesus," and "The Life of David Livingstone." The first has added to my appreciation of both the humanity and the divinity of our Saviour, and the last has made me understand God's wonderful persistence and devotion expressed in a man.

Stephen J. Corey.

"The Bible, Nature and Origin," by Dods; "Immanence of God," by Bowne; "Democracy and Social Ethics," by Jane Addams; "Rational Living," by King; "The Reconstruction of Religious Belief," by Mallock; "Jesus Christ and the Christian Character," by Peabody, and "The School and Society," by Dewey, are some of the most interesting books which I have read during the past year.

These are books which "find me." Their authors are masters of the subjects upon which they have written and bring to us the results of their ripened thought. If one desires to have his own opinions confirmed these volumes may prove disappointing; but if, on the other hand, he is looking for a sane and luminous discussion of the most vital questions of the day by writers who are jealous only for the truth, he will feel more than repaid.

Expositions of Holy Scripture. By the Rev. Alexander McLaren, D. D., Litt. D. A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York. Price per volume, $1.25 net. Sold only in sets.

Under the title of "Expositions of Holy Scripture" the publishers have arranged for the collection in permanent form of Dr. McLaren's Expositions which, when completed, will form a commentary on the Bible in thirty volumes, to be published in an annual series of six volumes. For fifty years Dr. McLaren has been preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ. For forty years of that period he occupied one pulpit. For at least twenty-five years of that period he has been recognized as the greatest British expositor. Not as brilliant, not as unique as Dr. Parker, whose "People's Bible" was one of the greatest religious productions of the latter part of the nineteenth century, Dr. McLaren has a strength that was lacking in the great English preacher. The Scotchman has always the sane point of view, and a wonderful gift of illustration. He has been primarily a student of the Book, and one who has waited on the Master. His sermons are the production of the study and a thoughtful mind. There is little of the market-place about them. He has gone to the great mine of Holy Scripture and digged deep into it, uncovering treasures that can not be found by the surface skimmer. And yet there is humanity and a heart power about Dr. McLaren which weaves itself into his studies so that they grapple with those problems which are at the very center and the circumference of a man's life. The six volumes of the first series are: "The Book of Genesis," "The Prophecies of Isaiah," "The Prophecies of Isaiah" (chapters XLIX-LXVI), and the "Prophecies of Jeremiah," and the three volumes of "The Gospel of Matthew." Each volume numbers from 338 to 420 pages, and is published in the very best style. They should be in every preacher's library. The man who has not read McLaren has missed some of the choicest expositions of the Word of God. It is a delight for us to know that one with whom the present reviewer has had intimate relations is completing a noble life work by giving his most mature thought to the preparation of this series, being assisted by Dr. Robertson Nicoll, editor of "The Expositor's Bible." Necessarily such a series must be sold in sets.

The Hope of Immortality. By Charles Fletcher Dole. The Ingersoll Lecture, 1906. New York, Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., publishers

The author does not base his argument for immortality on the fact of Christ's resurrection, though he does not question that fact. "The only sure ground for the hope of immortality must be in the fact that we are in some true sense immortal by nature. For unless we thus possess immortality, no miracle could demonstrate this fact." This gives the author's point of view. The fact that "man's life not only belongs to the realm of the senses and what all call material things, but it belongs essentially, in respect to all that concerns us as human to the invisible realm of thought or spirit;" the presence and prevalence of the idea of immortality; a glance over the brink, if we deny immortality; the reasonableness that the most valuable things should be preserved; what is involved in personality; a purposeful universe; a moral world—these are some of the facts on which the author bases his argument in his strongly-written book.

THE BOOKS OF STERLING WORTH
Are the "Campbell Books."
We will send you the Campbell Library, by prepaid express, $8.00.
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Our Budget

—Let us make the few weeks that remain of 1906 "tell on ages, tell for God."

—The Christian-Evangelist is nearing the half-way mark towards its 100,000 goal. Let's all pull together for the next few weeks, in reaching that mark. That will insure the 100,000 by 1909.

—C. W. B. M. day we hope was generally observed. If any of the churches have omitted doing so, let them do it yet. The women are doing a great work.

—Next Lord's day we must remember the plea on behalf of disabled ministers and their dependants.

—We shall be glad to consider any photographs or interesting material that would prove of value for our "Pioneer Number." These should be sent to us at once.

—We have great difficulty in publishing all the good things that come to us. Many brethren make the mistake of writing at too great length. The short article is the one that stands the best chance of being published, as well as the short news item.

—Read the "Elderburg Association." You will get some amusement, as well as some instruction on a sad state of affairs.

—The address we are now publishing by J. P. Lichtenberger is one of the three which some good brethren who do not seem able to see two sides of a question have called "an attack on our plea." We have already published two of these addresses. We can trust the good sense of the vast majority of the brotherhood not to hunt for "heresy" in men who are loyal to Jesus Christ, even though they may sometimes differ from us about certain methods or interpretations.

—Our serial story, "The Bronze Vase," is concluded in this issue. We shall publish some short stories between now and the new year, when another serial story will be started from the pen of J. Breckenridge Ellis. We shall give further particulars of this in our next issue. It will run only six months and will be in independent divisions. We hope to improve our Home Circle department in our new volume.

—There are some interesting contributions in the "Forum" that should be read by the women as well as the men.

—The Centennial fund of $250,000 in personal gifts proposed by the Foreign Society is making a good start. Nearly $20,000 in cash and pledges have been secured since the national convention. Read the announcement of the Foreign Society on our inside cover page this week. It is an interesting and convincing statement. Now is the time to secure real estate in all the far eastern world, for it is advancing in value and we will be compelled to pay much more in the not distant future.

—M. B. Madden, Sendai, Japan, reports six baptisms at that place. The work is in a most prosperous condition.

—The foundation of the beautiful new church at Omaha, of which S. D. Dutcher is pastor, is finished and the walls are rising.

—J. L. Thompson has taken the work at the Forest Avenue Church, Kansas City, where H. E. Wilhite is now engaged in a fine meeting.

—The Violett-Clarkson meeting at Loraine, O., closed with 104 added. A report next week.

—The Christian-Evangelist force enjoyed a call from Jas. T. Nichols of the "Christian Union."

—Frank Thompson, of the First Christian Church, Carmi, Ill., has accepted a call to the Temple Place Church of Decatur, to be effective January 1.

—George E. Jones has resigned his work at Turtle Creek, Pa., and is now on the editorial staff of the "Christian Worker," published in Pittsburg.

—R. A. Staley, of Dinuba, Cal., is delivering Sunday evening lectures on "The Church and Reformatory Movements," which are being largely attended.

—Charles H. Caton is doing some itinerary preaching in Arkansas. Brother Caton is one of our brightest pulpit men and ought to find a settled pastorate.

—R. L. McHatton, of Santa Rosa, Cal., reports 56 additions in his recent evangelistic work at various points, over 30 of these being by confession and baptism.

—Interest is increasing under the ministrations of C. L. McKim, who recently took the work at Oelwein, Ia. Large space was given in the daily paper to his Thanksgiving address.

—The brethren at Lawrenceburg, Ky., appreciate Walter C. Gibbs, having just extended to him a unanimous call for an indefinite period, and presented him with a fine new suit as a Christmas gift.

—Rochester Irwin reports the apportionment for state missions as passed at the church in Rochester, Minn. The children's program for home missions was an effective one and an offering was taken.

—E. A. Gilliland, who conducted the recent evangelistic meeting at the East St. Louis church, has accepted a call to the pastorate there, to begin work just as soon as he can complete evangelistic engagements already made.

—R. R. Eldred will return to Bolengi, Africa, this month. Miss Alice Ferrin and Miss Ella Ewing, of Illinois, will go out to the field with him. Glorious news comes from the Bolengi missions. Twenty-two baptisms recently reported.

—Mary R. Hawkins, of Cuckoo, Va., writes that Brother Forrest, of the University of Virginia, preached for the church at Gilboa on C. W. B. M. Day. It was a fine address from John 10:10, which was followed by a good offering.

—The "Artesia Advocate," N. M., gives a report of a sermon by Bro. James A. Challener, of Byran, on "Love the Great Power," in which love is finely analyzed and its various characteristics noted. It was a sermon worth preaching and worth hearing.

—The work at East Liverpool, Ohio, moves steadily forward. E. P. Wise writes us that the question as to who shall be their living link missionary in the foreign field is now up for decision. Preparations are going forward for a series of meetings in January when the Netz Sisters will help Brother Wise.

—Hugh C. Gresham has resigned as missionary of the American Sunday-school Union and is assisting Bro. Beem in his evangelistic work. He reports the meeting at Cornell a good one. He will, with the new year, go west to take up other work and preach for our scattered brethren as he may have opportunity.

—L. L. Carpenter will dedicate a newly repaired and greatly beautified house at Newville, Ind., December 16. This is one of the first churches for which Brother Carpenter preached when he began his ministry nearly fifty years ago. It is hoped that the churches in DeKalb County will send large delegations to this opening service.

—The seventy-fifth anniversary of the church at Eureka, Ill., of which Alva W. Taylor is pastor, will be celebrated next April. Brooks Brothers are to hold a meeting for this church at an early date. Miss Ella Ewing, one of the girls from the church, leaves this month to be a living link missionary of the church, at Bolengi, Africa.

—M. J. Thompson, of Dayton, Ore., writes us that the brethren there made preparation for a meeting, but their evangelist failed them. W. P. Marrs is now located there, though not as pastor. Brother Patterson, of Portland, came to the rescue, but being compelled to return, the meeting was closed until January 15, when another meeting will be held. Brother Muckley, of Portland, visited the brethren and preached for them one week night.

—On resigning the work at the Carondelet church, St. Louis, recently, in order to take up the work of city evangelist, G. E. Ireland was presented with a handsome gold watch and a testimony of warm and loving appreciation of Brother and Sister Ireland and their work. To Mrs. Ireland a handsome fur was presented with words of high regard. These are faithful servants of the Master, and among the most earnest Christian workers we know.

—The church at Ocean View, Delaware, one and one quarter miles from Bethany Beach, needs the pastoral care of a young man who would be willing to accept $400 per year. The church was dedicated about five years ago and has a membership of forty. There will be no debt, as the members will pay off the Church Extension loan before the new preacher gets there. Mrs. D. C. France writes us that she believes it is a good place for a tactful young man to advance the cause and to advance himself.

—The wedding bells are ringing merrily in Kansas City, Mo. The following announcements have been received: Miss Martha E. Stout to Rev. Nelson Hastings Trimble, at South Prospect Church of Christ, 8 p. m., December 18. Miss Bessie S. Fife (daughter of Bro. and Sister R. H. Fife), to Rev. Arthur K. Brooks, at Hyde Park Christian Church, Christmas evening. Our heartiest congratulations to these young people, and especially to the two young preachers, who have so wisely chosen.

—We are under obligations to many of our ministers and other readers for extracts from sermons of note or newspaper articles, and from different sources, which they clip and inclose to us in an envelope, for such use as we may wish to make of them. In this way many things are brought to our knowledge which would otherwise escape our attention. We appreciate this method which our friends have of assisting us, and trust they will keep it up, even though we cannot always make direct use of the matter sent.

—Writing from a sparsely populated part of Nebraska, among scattered and struggling Disciples, Bro. B. A. Wilkinson says: "I seize every opportunity, and create as many more as possible, to federate. I plan for union meetings of various kinds and persuade the pastors as far as I can, that the people want something of the kind." He tells about driving the saloons out of Gordon by this co-operation among the churches. Wherever there is the spirit of co-operation with the desire to accomplish good, the way will be found.

—F. P. Arthur will close his work at Grand Rapids, Mich., January 1, to enter the state work in the hope that Michigan is now ready for a forward move into new cities. He has had a pleasant service in Lyon Street Church of nearly eight years, and finds it hard to leave that field. A new church was built in 1901 on Fifth Avenue, and William Bellamy is now the pastor with Sister Workman as helper. This new cause promises to outgrow the First Church. The tone of the work, Brother Arthur reports, is better than ever.

—Now and then a copy of the editor's book on "The Holy Spirit" falls into the hands of a Philistine, and it is to him a red rag that stirs up all his theological pugilism. One such writes: "Mr. ———. Sir: From under your hand I have just seen some of the rotted theological lies about the holey Spirit, and the continuity of that indefinite something you call the church." He has not learned so much as that there be any Holy Spirit who has anything to do with men to-day, and as to the fruit of the Spirit, he appears not to have even tasted thereof. No wonder it all seems like a lot of "theological lies" to him.

—Prof. Errett Gates, of the University of Chicago, is going to work in a new direction. He will be open to engagements for evangelistic meetings during the months of April, May, and June, 1907. His plan is to spend two weeks in a place holding two meetings a day. There will be a lecture study each afternoon of the first week on the "Teachings of Jesus," and of the second week on the "Teachings of the Disciples." He proposes to use very freely the question box, and will preach an evangelistic sermon every evening with the purpose of bringing men to a decision for the Christ. Professor Gates can be addressed at the University of Chicago.

—It is always a delight to receive such a communication as: "I find the congregation willing to work and am much encouraged with the outlook." This is what L. E. Chase says of the brethren at LeRoy, Ill., with whom he has been a little less than two months. He reports seven added and the organization perfected. The attendance at all services is greatly increasing. The attendance at the Bible school, he reports, is 100 per cent greater than a year ago, and much development work is planned in this department. The offering for State missions this year was the largest ever taken by the congregation for any missionary work, it being $53 as compared with $5 last year.

—One of the best attendances at Sunday-school was that at the First Christian Church, Akron, Ohio, on what is called Patriotic Day, Sunday when there were present by actual count 1,401 people, and the offering for American missions amounted to $200.17. Pastor Darsie's class had an attendance of 405 and the collection was $75. We are not at all surprised that Superintendent Kelly H. Hays, under whose direction the day was planned, was unusually happy. This school is contesting with the one at Jacksonville, Ill. The following Sunday was a big day for Jacksonville, with 976 present and an offering of $150.23.

—J. W. Beach, writing from Batavia, Ark., says that three Seventh Day Advent preachers were holding meetings in that community and that they were making quite a number of converts, mainly from the Methodists and Baptists, and he adds that there is no one there able to meet their arguments. The New Testament is a sufficient refutation of their arguments. The resurrection of Christ on the first day of the week, the descent of the Holy Spirit, and the introduction of the new dispensation are all facts inconsistent with the Sabbatarian theory. A proper distinction between the Jewish Sabbath and the Christian Lord's day is generally sufficient to undermine the position of these Sabbatarians.

—Samuel B. Moore, who recently resigned the pastorate of the Hammett Place Church, St. Louis, is now ready to locate in another field where his good preaching ability and experience in the Christian ministry can count. During Brother Moore's three and a half years' pastorate in St. Louis, the membership has doubled and he left with the happy thought that all the indebtedness of the church had been provided for. W. W. Dowling, the senior elder of the church, is glad to commend Brother Moore and feels that he is just the man that a great many churches need. C. C. Garrigues, who was called to the Hammett Place Church, had great difficulty in getting his congregation at Albion, Ill., to release him, but they finally agreed to let him come to St. Louis as soon as they can get a suitable successor.

—John D. Zimmerman, minister at Horton, Kan., writes that the congregation there has raised more than $1,000 on the church debt.

—J. W. Davis has an unusual record. For the last twenty years he has preached for the Concord church in Macon, Mo., most of the time. He has just closed his ministry there and leaves the church in better condition for work than he has ever known it. He also leaves Illinois Bend church, in Adair county, where he began work twenty years ago. This, also, is in good condition. He writes that the work with these churches has been a very pleasant one and he is stronger and better able for the Christian ministry than ever, and is now ready for other fields. He may be addressed at Kirksville, Mo.

—The dedication of the new church at Litchfield, Ill., will definitely take place on December 16, the decorators having at last completed their work. J. Fred Jones will preach on Saturday night as well as at both services on Sunday. Friends are invited to meet and rejoice with M. S. Johnson, the pastor, and this faithful congregation. All departments of the work are flourishing, and more room had come to be a necessity. The old house is comparatively new, having been erected only five years ago, but it was wholly inadequate to the work of the growing congregation. At the Endeavor meeting the other night when missions was the subject, the audience was almost equal to one of Brother McLean's rallies. Every department is full of life. The last report of the Sunday-school attendance was 322.

CUTICURA OINTMENT.

The World's Greatest Skin Cure and Purest and Sweetest of Emollients.

Cuticura Ointment is beyond question the most successful curative for torturing, disfiguring humors of the skin and scalp, including loss of hair, ever compounded, in proof of which a single anointing with it, preceded by a hot bath with Cuticura Soap, is often sufficient to afford immediate relief in the most distressing forms of itching, burning, and scaly humors, eczemas, irritations, and inflammations, permit rest and sleep, and point to a speedy cure.

—Up till December 6 Charles Reign Scoville was able to count 4,888 reached by him in his meetings this year. This is a most happy and inspiring record which we trust will be an inspiration to every evangelist and preacher of the good news of salvation. Let us be careful, however, not to make a race merely to report so many hundreds of converts. We have met some evangelists and preachers who seem to give the impression that they are striving after a "record." Let us remember that results are with God, and that it is for us to be faithful in seeking to change men from the sinful and worldly life, rather than to establish a record surpassing that of some preacher or evangelist who has been on the field before. The evangelist has a great responsibility to men. He has, also, a great responsibility to God. The day is not passed when our converts need to be "pricked in their hearts."

—It was not the Editor's privilege to hear all the evangelists who assisted in our simultaneous campaign in St. Louis, but we did hear with only a few breaks, the series of sermons by Bro. C. M. Chilton, pastor of the First Christian Church in St. Joseph, Mo., who assisted Dr. J. M. Philputt at the Union Avenue Church. We are glad to say that we have never heard an abler series of evangelistic sermons from anyone. The Gospel he preaches is clothed with a sublimity, a power, a meaning, a beauty, that makes it not only winsome, but convincing and effective. The motives he urges, why men should become Christians, are the very highest, and appeal to reason, to conscience and to the will. He won the confidence and esteem of all who heard him. His masterly sermon at the union meeting at Odeon Hall on the last Sunday will not soon be forgotten. The sample sermons we heard from Herbert Yeuell at the First Church and W. F. Turner at the Hamilton Avenue Church sufficed to show that these were the right men at the right place.

—"I was turned down because part of the congregation insisted upon a younger man. It is a sad (and to me a new thing) to find our churches refusing to consider any man after he gets to be 50 years old. I am in better health than in past years, and fully competent for effective service, but I do not feel like being humiliated in this way, and I fear that I shall be compelled to turn to other work. 'That was a fine sermon for an old man,' I have been twice told of late and, hearing that, realized there would be no call nor has there been." This is a specimen of the communications we sometimes receive to our very deep sorrow. A man who has for thirty years or more been qualifying himself for the best work of his life may be "turned down" by some church for no other reason than that he has passed a certain mark in the number of his years. Other reasons do not seem to enter into the question of the selection of the preacher when he is on the wrong side of even forty years of age. The folly of such action on the part of the church is so manifest to those who have opportunities of wide experience that one has difficulty in exercising his patience sometimes. Of course, it is possible for a minister to cease growing intellectually and spiritually and to become entirely out of touch with the work demanded, but there seem to be few who through laziness come to such a pass. Many are put on the shelf by the unwise action of churches. There is such a thing as a church cultivating and helping its preacher, and this is just as much a duty as for the preacher to be the leader and the most active worker in the church.

He "Felt No Interest"—But Afterwards.

The Christian Publishing Company was kind enough to send me a copy of "Christian Union," by J. H. Garrison. When I first received the book I felt no interest in it, did not think I would read it. The theme was an old one, and I was familiar with the arguments in its favor; had been all over the ground again and again, and did not think I cared to go over it another time. But after looking at the book lying on my desk for several days, I concluded to read the introductory chapter—just to sample its style. After this there was no inclination to let go until the last chapter was read. The whole subject of Christian union in its historical, ecclesiastical, economic, ethical and spiritual phases is here presented with a freshness and cogency that is inspiring. And this is all done with a style so direct, limpid, fluent and concise as to make this little book a literary gem. You have the subject of Christian union here, up to date, and in a nutshell. My ideas on this subject have been clarified, verified, fructified and intensified.

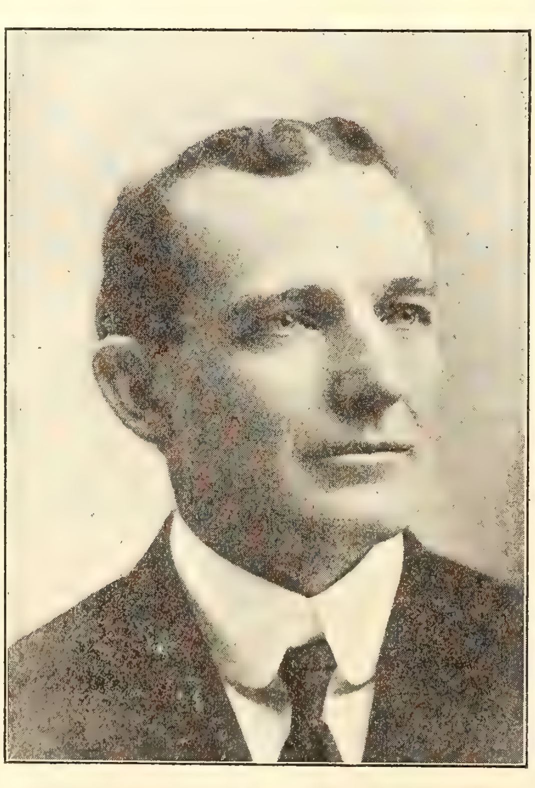
Built by its own Members.

F. M. Rains recently dedicated the Central Christian Church, West Side, Kansas City, Mo. Twice had this congregation lost its home by foreclosure sales, but the men and women would not be discouraged. We reprint here from the columns of the Kansas City "Star" its account of this plucky church and present also the picture of S. W. Nay, the go-ahead present minister:



S. W. Nay.

"By the grace of God we will build it ourselves. We haven't $10,000 to pay out so we'll save $10,000."

Men and women with that sort of spirit could not long be without a church. No useless repining for them. They didn't believe in committees to worry people for subscriptions. They saw the practical side of the question, and that was: "We are without a church; we have no money, no credit; we believe in our own congregation. We'll keep on trying. Success must come."

That was the kind of men and women that made up the large part of the membership of the Central Christian Church, West Side, two years ago. They had lost two church buildings—sold to other denominations to satisfy mortgages. They were in debt. There was strife and dissension in the membership until the Rev. S. W. Nay became pastor and with him came new life and hope.

"We're going to build a church," the men announced, and people laughed. "It'll be the same old story," some said. "You'll be sold out again."

"You don't know us," was the reply. "We'll build it ourselves."

The members began to plan, not like architects, but like men and women who knew only that they wanted something and intended to have it. They asked for bids and none came. No one would lend money. No contractor thought much about such a job. "Then," the pastor said, and his members indorsed him, "then by the grace of God we will build the church ourselves."

And they did. It took a year and one-half to build it, but they did it. No architect was there to direct the work or to prepare the plans. They had no money to hire architects. The leaders of the congregation gathered around tables in the evenings and after looking at pictures of churches in magazines and papers and at the plans of other churches they evolved plans of their own and worked to them.

The clerks, bankers, lawyers, doctors and laborers—mostly laborers—who formed the congregation, put on overalls, excavated for the foundation and arranged the basement of a $20,000 church. The pastor was there early and late and his willingness to handle the pick and shovel, and later the carpenter's tools, put new life into the workers.

An inventor of a new concrete wall machine came along and offered to build the wall for the price of the material, to test the machine. The women gave church socials and fairs and got together enough money for material. Early in the morning members who lived near would do a little work on the church before breakfast. After supper they worked again. Some of the business, professional and office men, who always had spent their vacations in Colorado, on the Great Lakes or with the "old folks back East," put on working clothes and spent their vacation working on the church building.

No distinction was made as to social position. The banker, professional man, clerks in the dry goods store, laborers in the packing house or on the streets—all worked side by side.

"We are laborers together for one great cause," they said, and they acted and looked like it. They sang joyful hymns, accompanied by the rasping noise of the saws, the clatter of hammers and the click of the masons' tools. The hands of the men who sold dress goods or handled nothing heavier than a pencil or pen became calloused from hard toil.

The women were there in the evenings with hot coffee and sandwiches and in the "breathing spells" they served luncheon to the men. It was hard work, the hardest that some of the men had ever done.

The new church stands at the corner of Seventh street and Armstrong avenue, West Side.

"We did it; that's all," is the way the Rev. S. W. Nay talks about it. "Out of the almost hopeless condition that existed two years ago we've brought harmony, enthusiasm and a church."

G. L. Wharton's Death and Burial

At noon, Lord's Day, November 4, in Calcutta, Brother Wharton died from cancer of the duodenum, or lower stomach. His life needs no praise from me; but I can not refrain from saying, that when we, as a people, cease to cherish his memory, as the hero of our Foreign Missions, and especially of our India Mission, it will be a day which the Master will regard as a day of retrogression. He was our first missionary to the heathen. He was our prince of pleaders for the cause of missions among the heathen. He emphasized his plea by being a missionary. He knew the meaning of being a missionary. For over two years he had been separated from his family, that he might do the work of a missionary. He remained at his post until his strength failed him. In order to go to his work, he had to rest twice on the roadside, so weak in body had he become. At the time of his death, he was a teacher in the Bible College at Jubbulpore. He was the first to start this school, when he lived and worked at Harda. He promoted its interests by raising $25,000 for its buildings and equipment. While on the threshold of realizing his fond wish for this school, he was taken away from earth and its work. The building is now in process of erection; but before it is completed he has entered into a house not made with hands.

But my purpose now is to tell of his last illness. Many hearts will ache when they know the peculiarly sad circumstances under which his life ended. He was away from home and friends. Among those who ministered to him at the time of his death, I was the only one not a stranger to him. Mrs. Wharton and his children are in Hiram, Ohio. For four months, without understanding fully the nature of his disease, he had been trying to recover his health. To this end he had gone from Jubbulpore to the mountains, and to a Sanitarium in Calcutta. Until within a few weeks of his death he did not think that he had any serious ailment. On October 12 I received from him the following letter:

"The Sanitarium," 50 Park Street,
Calcutta, Oct. 11, '06.

Dear Brother Adams:—I feel that I should tell you, as Secretary of the Mission, more particularly of my condition and movements. I have been doing my best, since July 9 when I went to Simla, to regain the strength I lost during May and June on the plains. After being in Simla nearly a month, as I was not gaining satisfactorily, I called on a physician for advice and treatment. He examined me rather carefully, and said there was nothing much the matter with me, and that all I needed was a little tonic and good weather. I got dyspepsia from the commencement of his medicine. Not being satisfied, I called on the best physician in Simla. He asked me carefully of my symptoms and pronounced it nothing but atomic dyspepsia, which would soon pass away. He gave me some medicine, but I got no better, and suffered intensely with indigestion, notwithstanding all my careful dieting at his order. I finally went to him on September 25 and told him that his medicine was worse than a failure. He then examined me carefully and to his surprise found what he called a growth in the stomach. He called another doctor to consult. They agreed in their diagnosis, and had but one suggestion—"exploratory operation." Dr. McNab is a perfect gentleman and admitted that, if it were himself, he would not allow any one in India to operate upon him. I remained in Simla until October 5, and then went to Ludhiana and consulted two doctors there and was advised to come here.

This is, as you know, a kind of "Battle Creek Sanitarium." Dr. Ingersoll and his wife, who are in charge, are graduates of the Ann Arbor School of Medicine. They have been examining me to-day. The substance of the matter is, that all agree to the presence of a tumor in the stomach, as the cause of my trouble.

This will give you some correct idea of my condition. I have written the above to Mrs. Wharton, but to no one else. I believe I will, by God's help, overcome the whole trouble, without either the knife or going home. At any rate, I believe that I am doing right to make a fair effort to get well here, before going home to the surgeon. I will keep you posted. If I do not get better here in three weeks, I will go to Jubbulpore and see what the cool dry climate and dieting will do for me there. I am cheerful and mean to make the most of my disappointments. God knows all.

Lovingly,
G. L. Wharton.

In a few days after this letter was written, he sent for me and J. G. McGavran, and came to the decision to submit to an operation, with the hope that the trouble was being caused by something which the surgeons could remove. The day for the operation was fixed; but when it came his fever was so high and his condition so bad that they decided to wait until he should be better prepared for the ordeal. But it never came. He rapidly grew worse and with the light of the morning of November 4, I saw that death was at work. The end came about noon. I had a post mortem examination and the growth, which was so evident to the touch, proved to be cancer of the lower stomach. In his brave effort to recover, he had not the shadow of a chance. No surgeon's knife could have brought him any relief. It now looks as if we were providentially kept from having the operation. On the morning of November 5 I buried him in Lower Circular Road Cemetery, Calcutta. I feared I should have to do this task alone, as none of our missionaries were within reach; but, just as we entered the cemetery gate, Brother and Sister Monroe arrived from Deoghar. The new friends of the Sanitarium were also with us, and thus for the most part, strange hands committed his body to the earth. Our hearts are broken over the loss of our comrade and for the sorrowing wife and children, who are just now receiving the sad message which I cabled to Cincinnati. It was a hard duty to say, "Brother Wharton is dead;" but we are consoled with the fact that in life he lived in fellowship with God, and that, in death, God the Father was his comfort. "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me."

"Making an Oxford Bible"

Most Remarkable Product of the Greatest of Printing Houses

"The Oxford Bibles are, as all the world knows, more popular and more widely circulated than any other edition of the sacred volume, and all the world knows also that their remarkable popularity depends upon the marvelous qualities of the paper on which they are printed. For the Bible is one of the longest books in the world; and, in order that it may be presented to the student in a shape at once serviceable and compact, paper of very peculiar attributes is required. It must be very thin, but at the same time it must be strong in texture and opaque. The famous Oxford India paper fulfils these conditions in a greater degree than any other paper in the world; and during the last twenty years it has entirely revolutionized the Bible trade."

"The Helpful" Paper.

A well known minister writes: "THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is the most helpful journal that comes to my table, and is always the first one read." We like that word helpful. It expresses exactly what we are trying to make THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—helpful to every one of its readers in their efforts to live the Christian life and do their Christian work in the world. We have no higher ambition than to make THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST helpful to its readers in realizing their highest aims and aspirations.

Report Children's Day.

Offerings from children's day for home missions are coming in slowly this year. A larger number of contributing Sunday-schools is reported this year thus far. The amount of the offerings is a little below that for the same period last year. With the splendid gain made last year the home board is more than justified in its appeal for $15,000 this year. From the enthusiasm already shown by our preachers in the Centennial campaign, we are sure that they will heartily join in the movement to enlist every Sunday-school for an offering for home missions this year.

The New University.

Referring to the article which we published from President E. V. Zollars concerning the Oklahoma Christian University, which has been located at Enid, our readers may judge of the interest attached to the location of such an institution when the city of Enid was willing to pay a cash basis of $85,000 and to donate a campus worth at least $20,000. Other cities made generous bids, but this excelled them all, it was thought, and so secured the school. That the institution, under such an administration as President Zollars will give it, will be a powerful factor in the future development of New Testament Christianity, not only in Oklahoma but throughout the great southwest, can not be doubted. The brotherhood at large will watch with interest the growth of this rising educational star in the southwestern horizon, and will rejoice to see it become a star of the first magnitude, shedding a bright and steady light for the intellectual, moral and religious enlightenment of the people.

Winona's Church Destroyed.

The little church at Winona, Miss., has suffered a great loss. Only a handful, not a dozen members, and perhaps not over three men in the number, they had a good house in that beautiful little city of 5,000 people, and it was well located. In the hurricane that swept over parts of the south, the building was completely destroyed. Having no money and no preacher, they were preparing to sell the pile of lumber to the highest bidder and give up, though they had been planning for a meeting to be held by our state board. But Bro. H. K. Coleson persuaded them to wait and see if their brethren would come to their rescue. If we were able in Mississippi we would be glad to look after our own unfortunate family, but as you know, we are a very feeble folk. Now, if the brethren will come to the aid of this little band and help them to stand upon their feet they will be in better condition than they were before the storm. For, first, they will feel stimulated by the help of others to do more heroic things for themselves; and their religious neighbors and outside friends will have much more respect for them when they see they are counted worthy by their brethren. They had a good house. Now they have only a heap of broken planks. They are positively not able to put these together and make a house again.

All gifts will be acknowledged by receipt. It is suggested by Brother Coleson that all moneys be sent to me as corresponding secretary. And I, of my own accord, promise that if enough is not sent to help them rebuild, it will be returned at option of donor.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Illinois.

Passing through Chicago I took time to call on Brother Parker Stockdale, who is new among us, and preaches to the great satisfaction of the Jackson Boulevard Church. His loyalty to the Scriptures and his faithful Gospel preaching are very highly appreciated by his people. He was at the Buffalo convention, the first he has attended with us. He was greatly delighted with the large purposes and growing work of the church, as well as by the profound addresses which he heard.——A. T. Campbell has recently taken the work of the Metropolitan church and seems to fit well the conditions. He is thoroughly interested in Christian education and hopes soon to have some of his young people in Eureka college.——S. G. Buckner is in the midst of church building at Harvey. The house is under roof and will cost about $12,000, including the lot. This was a heroic undertaking. for such a small weak company, but success is practically assured and much will be due to the noble young preacher.——At Waukegan E. N. Tucker is also in the building stage. The first story is up, covered, finished and is in use. The company numbers but 90, but they have a Sunday-school of 200 enrolled and are pressing forward. We also have another church, meeting in the old house, in Waukegan, numbering about 80 souls, with a good Sunday-school, and regular preaching, but previous engagements hurried me away without meeting with the church. From some cause the work has been unusually difficult for us in northern Illinois, but we are making steady gains and the people are strong for the truth when they once understand it.——Milwaukee, Wis., the center of the west's beer interest, as Peoria is of the whisky interest, has a splendid Church of Christ. Claire L. Waite, late of Chicago, is the able and much loved minister. The church has been fortunate in selecting pastors, among whom have been the late G. L. Brokaw, M. B. Ryan, F. N. Calvin, Brother Kreidler and others, through whose able consecration to the work the church has its strength of 400 members, 200 in Sunday-school, 35 in Christian Endeavor and C. W. B. M., 25, and a good modern house costing perhaps $20,000. The church is gaining in influence and has good standing in the city. It was the church that discovered B. H. Sealock, sent him to Eureka College, and he is now our minister at Lexington, Ill. How many boys in the churches are yet undiscovered who might be a great power in the world's life if encouraged to commit themselves to the service of the Master! While we "pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the field," we ought to be looking after it a little ourselves. It seems to me that every purposeful boy or girl, whatever his possible profession, should be looked after by the church and its pastor, with a view to utilizing his strength also for righteousness and the church by at least encouraging a Christian education.——The church at Lewistown has always struggled, yet kept the lights burning, sometimes feebly, but now it is having an era of prosperity and blessing. Walter Kline, one of our strong, wise and industrious young men, who is also president of the Third District Missionary Society, has been with the church about nine months. He has added 25 to the church membership, which is now 200, with 100 in the Sunday-school and 16 in the C. W. B. M. The church is investing about $1,800 in church improvements. While this is being done, the sheriff very generously tendered the church for its meetings, the use of the circuit court room of the beautiful court house of Fulton county. The church highly appreciates this liberal favor. Indeed here is seen the fellowship of law and Gospel. The jury box becomes the choir loft for the praise of God; from the judge's stand is proclaimed pardon and life and in the idle spectators' chairs sit the listeners, interested in the greater and larger trial of life, through which we all are passing.——At Ipava the church is enjoying a season of refreshing and prosperity under the strong and mature ministry of J. T. Craig. He came over into Illinois two years ago from Missouri, but is as loyal to the interests of our state, both educational and evangelistic, as if native born. This is one of the strong older churches, having about 300 members with 200 enrolled in the Sunday-school. This is the home of our venerable brother, Dr. J. H. Breeden, to whose ministry and help the churches in this region are much indebted. He is the father of H. O. Breeden, for twenty-one years leader of our forces in Des Moines, Iowa. M. T. Cooper, after a useful ministry, in the regions round about is, quietly living near Ipava. May the Lord bless our veterans in Israel as well as those now on the firing line in the midst of the fight.——At Astoria J. W. Keefer is closing a three years' ministry. This is one of our good older congregations, that has contributed many households to the larger new west. Death has claimed many of the veterans and those remaining are standing loyally by the work.——At Baders L. R. Thomas was in a good meeting. The church has had only irregular preaching for a year and with some other unfortunate occurrences has become much weakened, but the valor and loyalty and perseverance of those that remain are truly heroic and commendable. If the meeting fills the present prophecy, the church will be soon on its feet again, and will hold forth the Word of life regularly, to the people. There is a choice company of young people here, faithfully filling their part in the Master's service.——Removals and deaths have so weakened the Frederick church that the Sunday-school is all that is doing regular business. John Fagan, formerly of Eureka College, a business man, and his estimable wife, lead in the Sunday-school, which is in a prosperous condition.——The Table Grove Church of about 70 members and 100 enrolled in Sunday-school, 30 in the Christian Endeavor, 25 Juniors, has recently completed a $2,800 improvement, giving them a beautiful modern house, as good as new. It has an unusually strong board of officers and a faithful membership, rich, not in means, but in faith and good works. E. J. Stanley has just closed a very successful pastorate and F. S. Nichols, a senior in Eureka College, succeeds him. He will make his home with the church after his graduation. It is difficult to hold students in college, when the field is so ripe for the harvest. We have in Illinois about 425 more churches than preachers. The college must train more men.

Oregon.

Since November 4 twenty-two churches have sent in offerings for Oregon missions. The list is as follows: Albany First, $13.40; Ashland, $19.70; Athena, $24.25; Corvallis, $5.50; Cottage Grove, $29.20; Dallas, $17.25; Dayton, $5; Drain, $5; Falls City, $5.20; Forest Grove, $12; Harrisburg, $5; Heppner, $8.75; Hillsboro, $5.20; Hood River Valley, $24.55; La Grande, $19.50; McMinnville, $12; Monmouth, $20.15; Nashville, $3.35; Pleasant Hill, $7.30; Richland, $5; Scio, $3.20, and Aumsville, $18.45.——Although not on the list in 1905, Aumsville, Dayton, Harrisburg, Heppner, Richland and Scio are among the first contributors for this year. Of the above named churches, on the offering list for both years, only Ashland, Falls City, Forest Grove and Hood River Valley have gone ahead of last year's offering. This does not include payments on five-year pledges, some of which are included in the above figures. Although six churches are here added to the offering list, not on last year, the general offering is still short of that for last year from the churches here named. We are hoping, however, that the payments on pledges and the gifts from other churches will materially change the prospect for a large advance over last year's gift.——Several churches might follow the good example of Albany, McMinnville, Portland First, Roseburg and Silverton, who loaned their ministers to the state board for a meeting, turning the proceeds over to the treasury of the O. C. M. C. The district work is proceeding nicely, and we hope to report more evangelists at work in the near future. The year 1909 will soon be here. F. E. BILLINGTON, Cor . Sec.

Virginia.

The renewed and enlarged house of the Manchester congregation was used for service the last Sunday in November, and rededicated to the Lord's work. This is a great victory for this congregation. C. O. Woodward is the pastor. They have the largest Virginia Sunday-school, 400.——W. G. Johnston has held a good meeting at Blacksburg, the seat of Virginia Polytechnic Institute, in which there are 600 students. The congregations were very large, and there were quite a number added. This congregation is doing splendid work in this college town. E. R. Kemm is the minister.——Virginia has set us as one of her centennial mottoes 30,000 Disciples in Virginia by 1909. The present membership is 25,000.——Virginia Christian College is making a great effort to secure $50,000 for two needed buildings. The college deserves the support of all good men.——A new building has just been completed at Sheva. The congregation has heretofore worshipped in a hall. A. F. Ramsey is pastor.——D. M. Austin has accepted a call for a second year in the Perseverance field.——The new building at Blackstone is a beauty, and a great credit to this young congregation.——H. D. Coffey expected to organize the third church in Bristol, Va. and Tennessee, by December 1.——The Roanoke church is planning to purchase the property for a third congregation in the magic city.——Wm. Burleigh and the Portsmouth church are planning an aggressive work. Virginians should look out for Portsmouth.——B. H. Melton, of Marshall street, Richmond, is in a meeting with J. T. T. Hundley and the Norfolk church. H. C. COMBS,

Georgia Notes.

Two "Southern Evangelist" subscribers, who are now readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, have written me that they object to the latter's position on "federation." For their benefit, as well as for the benefit of others, I want to say that they are passing through my own experience on the subject. Like them, I was uninformed as to what federation is, and, consequently, was prejudiced against it, but since knowledge has taken the place of ignorance concerning it, I am a full convert to its purposes. My ignorance of it produced the prejudice against it and caused me to draw hasty and unjust conclusions respecting it. I thought I was right in condemning it until I read Brother Garrison's explanation of it in his matchless book on "Christian Union." I am now thoroughly convinced that while "federation" is not the real thing desired, it is a step toward it and that is all that is claimed for it. Read and see, and if we do not take a front seat on this subject, we will soon have to take a back seat in religious progress. To take this front seat requires no sacrifice of truth, but it does require love for God and man and a desire for the world's redemption. This love and this desire, which naturally follows, will enlarge our vision, right the wrongs in religion, exalt God's word, unite heart and soul in Jesus Christ and answer his prayer for the unity of his people. If there are Christians to unite, as we claim, and if love begets love then we must love if we expect the offspring of love. In order to love we must become acquainted. Acquaintance is not love but it is necessary in order to reach love. So "federation" is not Christian union, but it leads to acquaintance, acquaintance leads to love and love leads to unity. Federation, acquaintance, love, unity. This is the whole thing in a nutshell as I see it. Let us investigate before we condemn.

The Christian Church, Valdosta, where the Georgia convention was held.

The following report from Bro. C. P. Presley, of Sherman, Ga., will give our readers an idea of what it means to be an evangelist in the mountain counties of Georgia, as well as an idea of the great needs of that portion of our state. The pocket change, potatoes, apples and woolen socks received sound like the days of "Raccoon" John Smith in Kentucky. I am sure that Brother Presley needs and deserves another pair of socks as well as an increase in the other things mentioned. But here is the report: "I have been requested to report my work to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. This report is from August 1. My first meeting was at Ludville. Two made the 'good confession' and the church was left in good working order. I went to Bethel next with C. C. Goodson and D. Anderson. Had good meeting with five additions. I then held a meeting at Pleasant Hill, my home congregation, assisted by Brother Goodson. Brother Anderson was with us two days. At the close of a week's meeting I baptized six. My next preaching was at Antioch, Cherokee county. I only preached a few days. The church seemed greatly revived but no additions. From Antioch I went to Adairsville and held a five days' meeting and had four additions. I had to close the meeting to meet the executive committee of the North Georgia district held at Pleasant Hill, Pickens county. The committee then employed me to visit all the churches I could during the next mouth. The first church I visited was Pisgah, Gilmar county. I found the church with no regular supply. I preached one sermon. They will be represented in the next annual meeting of the district to be held at Ludville. From here I went to Stanley's Creek, Fannin county, and preached six sermons. They are highly in favor of the co-operative work. Wilscot was my next point. Preached four sermons and added three to the membership. This church has no regular preacher. I then preached one sermon at Big Creek school house and went to Dial, in the same county, and preached two sermons. This part of the district is badly in need of help. For twenty-five miles square we haven't a brother who will lead in prayer. On this round I was gone thirteen days, preached fourteen sermons, baptized three and received $5.25, one bushel of potatoes, one peck of apples and one pair of woolen socks. On my way home I got lost in the mountains and had to camp out all night."

F. G. Umbach, one of the leading members of the Athens church, is quite ill. The executive committee of the Northeast Georgia district will hold an important meeting at Winder, December 12.——S. S. Landrum will spend the winter at Lakeland, Fla.——G. W. Foster, of Arnoldville, is entered as a new subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He lives a long way from his church and is deprived of church privileges but he will have a good preacher, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, to visit him every week, and the next thing you hear a church will be organized.——THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is now our Georgia paper. Let all pay their subscriptions promptly and talk for the paper and report through it. Send brief reports and they will receive a welcome. Order your Sunday-school supplies from this paper and you will be pleased.

Kentucky.

H. L. Atkinson is getting a good grip of the work at Hazel Green and West Liberty. At the former place repairs are in progress and hopes are entertained that a new building will be erected at the county seat of Morgan. Many plans have been formed for more effective work in that important territory. Six added at Hazel Green.——There were seven added in the work of S. J. Short in the Big Sandy valley. He is moving to East Point, Johnson county.——Wellsburg was helped by a visit from E. T. Hays and he reports the work as prospering.——William Stanley is besought by the Campbellsville people to remain and the board is urged to continue help to that field.——Worthville had six additions and Earl B. Barr says the Sunday-school is splendid and audiences fine.——Beattyville moves on under the ministry of J. S. Mill. Improvement is needed on the building and the situation demands the help of the board.——Eighteen additions constitute one of the items in the report of G. W. Adkins.——The church at Belleview, Boone county, has G. H. Hinnant as minister to succeed Edgar C. Riley. Three added and interest good.——One baptism at Erlanger. L. B. Haskins will remain and will also preach half time at Ludlow. Really each congregation ought to have a man for full time.——D. C. McCallum says that the interest in the work is being well sustained. There were sixty-seven added during a recent meeting, O. J. Young doing the preaching.——Latonia has recorded another victory. Fifty added during the past month—forty-six of them during a meeting in which P. H. Duncan helped H. C. Runyon and the church. Brother Duncan lives in the home of Brother Runyon and has been interested in the work there since he in conjunction with George A. Miller started the work. People turned away at almost every service for lack of room to furnish even standing room.——The work of J. W. Masters in Harlan and Bell counties shows splendid results. Thirty-seven added. Among them a minister of another denomination for whom Masters predicts great usefulness among us.——The work of W. J. Cocke at South Louisville resulted in more than thirty additions. Much regret was felt that he could not remain for a week or two longer. He went from there to Pikeville, in the great county of Pike to help C. M. Summers and the church. A new house of worship is assured in this important field; $2,000 given by one Disciple. It is proposed to build a house worthy of the cause in the county seat of this largest county in Kentucky, save one. He says that C. M. Summers is doing well in that work.——Two added in the work of H. L. Morgan in southeastern Kentucky, and $83 raised for local work.——Jackson county has the services of Z. first month's report shows eleven added and much other good done. He will do good there and Broadway church, Lexington, will not be ashamed of the work of their evangelist.——D. G. Combs has gone to Florida and will preach the Gospel at Leesburg, while he is resting. Listen—"I will come back at once if you don't want me to lose the time. I have been in the work forty years and never took a vacation. Let me know how long you are willing for me to stay, sure." His report for November shows 19 days, 31 sermons, 38 additions, a divided congregation united and an unfinished house of worship to be completed. May the Lord bless this tireless and loyal servant of the Cross.——H. W. Elliott was at work all the month at home and abroad. We have not received very large returns from the November offering; $452.57 received, an increase of $110.25 over last November,and tnis is a gain of $295.15 since the Louisville convention as compared with the same period in 1905.——We urge prompt remittance on the part of all who have taken the offering and plead with the congregations that have not done so to lose no time in taking the offering. Do not allow another month to pass without paying your respects to this great work. Directly other interests will be demanding your attention and dollars and Kentucky missions will be kicked and cuffed out of the way like a Thanksgiving football. Lend a hand now.

New York City.

During November our Disciples' union held a joint meeting with the evening session of the semi-annual convention of the C. W. B. M. The attendance and enthusiasm was the greatest in many months. Miss Helen F. Clark, director of the New York Foreigners' Mission, told of her work among the Chinese, Italians and Jews on the lower east side. It was a revelation to us all. Some of us did not know that the purchase price of girls in the metropolis of free America ranges from a few hundreds for the very young to $1,500 to $2,000 for the most attractive girls of 16 or 18 years.——At Fifty-sixth street we recently baptized five Chinese men, four of whom take membership with us. This gives us seven faithful members, fruits of our Chinese Bible school. Three of them desire further education in both the English and Chinese Bible in order that they may be of greater service among their own people. The possibilities of our work among the Chinese seems to be limited only by the scarcity of available teachers.——The Second Church at One Hundred and Sixty-ninth street, expects to dedicate their new building December 16. They will then have one of the best appointed churches of our people in Greater New York. This splendid work is a tribute to the seventeen years' ministry of S. T. Willis. He has staying qualities.——Walter S. Rounds, the new pastor at Third Church, Brooklyn, is already engaged in a protracted meeting. Every one is optimistic.——The serious illness and consequent resignation of M. E. Harlan at Sterling Place, Brooklyn, cast a cloud over all our preachers and workers which does not lift. He was an efficient pastor and a strong preacher, but he was greater still as a man. Every one respected him, honored him, loved him. He left his impress upon us all. His improvement is very slow, but we hope for more speedy recovery with prolonged rest.

Ohio.

It ought not to be forgotten that Ohio is looking forward to a simultaneous evangelistic campaign next November to February, 1907-1908. Much has been said about it, but now is the time to lay the plans by securing your evangelists and singers and also preparing the church. Let this year be a year of purging in the church. Let every congregation clean house. Get the dead wood out. Heal up all the old sores, purify the church life. Let it be a year of fasting and prayer. Let the church get right with God.——Geo. P. Taubman has resigned at Portsmouth. He has been there several years and made a large showing. It will be hard to find just the right man to follow him.——E. B. Barnes, of Noblesville, Ind., has been holding a good meeting with the church at Monterey.——W. H. Boden, of Washington Court House, is doing quite a little evangelistic work by holding a meeting at New Holland, with 23 additions. He is now in a meeting at his old parish, Marshfield.——W. A. Brundige held a good meeting at Buford, in Highland county, with 26 at last account. He goes in December to Cambridge.——Brother John Shaeffer, of North Benton, held one pulpit for 60 years, and has lived in one house for 70 years. He is very spry for a man of his age, taking a walk daily about the home. He reads without glasses and takes an active interest in all current events.——I have recently given J. H. Garrison's book on "The Holy Spirit," a second careful reading. This was done in view of some recent utterances against it. If I were writing that book there are two or three things that I might put differently, but they are not serious things. The author does not close the volume with "ne plus ultra." We have altogether too many editorials, articles and books in our religious literature that do close thus. This one thing is clearly apparent—most of the critics of this book need to read it carefully. It will do you good to read this book even if you do not keep step all the way. J. H. Garrison is still a student on the subject of the Holy Spirit. So am I. Some among us evidently are not. They know it all to a mathematical accuracy.

Our Birthday Party.

The Bay Union of Auxiliaries to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions celebrated its second birthday anniversary by holding the eighth quarterly convention at the West Side Christian Church, San Francisco. There were 75 delegates who responded to roll call and a new auxiliary reported from South Berkley.

When Mrs. R. P. Shepherd finished her "Tidings Talk" one felt strongly impelled to go right home and put into practice her excellent suggestions. One entire column would be required to do justice to the paper by Mrs. J. H. Wood on "Immediate and Ultimate Aims for the Bay Union." All were pleased to listen to the greeting from our first president, Mrs. Agnew, of Chicago.

Officers were elected as follows: For president, Mrs. Hiram Van Kirk; for vice-president, Mrs.

Auxiliary, then a church organized and now a splendid work requiring a $17,000 structure to house the activities of a growing congregation.

The two addresses of the afternoon were of equal merit, both emphasizing the need of co-operation among the Christian women for the betterment of the great heathen sisterhood. Dr. Mary B. Ritter's "Recent Observations in Japan" opened up a vista of usefulness for workers in a field ripe unto the harvest. "The Great Sisterhood," treated in Dwight E. Potter's forceful style, was very helpful. It was a day of good fellowship, beautifully crowned by the Vesper Service. The secretary's reports show a membership of 165 women in the auxiliaries about the Bay. Let each woman plan her duties so as to save the second Tuesday in February for the enjoyment of the Ninth Convention.

The Huntington (W. Va.) Meeting.

Our revival closed at Huntington with 66 additions to the church. There were 40 baptisms, and over fifty of the entire number were net gain. We had a good hearing all of the time. We were seriously interrupted by sickness among the members, the pastor being confined to his bed a part of the time. We had a very large hearing from other religious bodies, and some co-operated in the meeting. We received the most courteous attention from the daily papers of the city, and they even urged us to give larger reports of our meetings daily. The church at Huntington, after passing through the perils of the past, is on the road to victory. The congregation seems to be in perfect harmony, and is planning for greater things. The beautiful building which was saved some months ago by the timely aid of the Church Extension Board, has been newly frescoed, and presents a very attractive appearance. The present prosperity of the church is largely due to the wise leadership of the pastor, Orilas G. White and his good wife who are very much loved by the entire congregation.

R. H. Fife, Evangelist.

Winning in a City.

Some years ago, in the city of Indianapolis, a great religious convention was in session. The ministers held a meeting with discussion of the theme, "How to Reach the Masses." At that time Messrs. Moody and Sankey were in this city. They went down on one of the main street corners and entering a store, Mr. Moody borrowed a dry goods box. Taking it out on the street corner, he said to Mr. Sankey, "Now, mount and sing a song." Mr. Sankey sang one or two earnest Gospel songs, and when a great throng of passers-by had paused to listen, Mr. Moody mounted the box and made a brief, earnest and impassioned address. In closing his address he said: "The ministers are discussing the question: How to Reach the Masses. Let's go down and help them. I will speak and Mr. Sankey will sing." And in a few moments later a great crowd which filled the church to overflowing pressed in with Moody and Sankey to the meeting.

Can a great meeting be held in a city church? For years we have been discussing this question: The pros and cons have been very ably given. For six weeks now an Indianapolis church has been giving a demonstration of the possibilities of such a meeting. In a city of over 200,000 population, the Third Christian Church, under the leadership of Charles Reign Scoville, has been holding a great meeting. We have shown that, while it might take a little longer time than in smaller places, the same faith and prayer and consecration that win the towns, will win the cities. Thus far 579 people have stepped out, either to confess Christ, or to re-consecrate themselves in the service, and the meeting still goes on with no appointment to close. The church board of thirty-five good men, and true, has stood loyally and as one man, by the evangelist in these meetings. We are glad to report progress, thus far, and will make full report at the close.—Chas. B. Newnan.

Chicago Letter.

The Jackson Boulevard Church, Parker Stockdale, minister, had a Harvest Home Festival November 25. The doors had to be locked to prevent over-crowding. This church is growing in all departments.——C. C. Morrison is installed again at Monroe Street, and additions are being reported already.——The First Church, H. L. Willett, minister, and R. L. Handley, associate, is planning to build in the near future. They have been meeting in a hall. About $25,000 has just been pledged. As much more is expected soon. Evanston, Irving Park and Garfield Boulevard Church are putting forth special effort in Bible school work, and most cheering growth is being realized.——The Englewood Church has outgrown its Sunday-school room, and is planning to erect a new and modern Sunday-school building.——The Sheffield Avenue, Ashland, and West Pullman Churches are making good progress in wiping out their debts.——Douglass Park is raising a fund for a new building.——E. M. Haile, lately chosen minister of South Chicago Church, has been in the hospital for several weeks. He is now about recovered and occupied his pulpit last Sunday.——Harvey expects to dedicate its new church, a splendid structure, near the first of the year.——The new Executive Board of the C. C. M. organized by electing Carl Bushnell chairman, Mrs. F. M. Jackson secretary. Sec. W. J. Wright, of the A. C. M. S. will meet with the Board Saturday.——The West End Church's rally day in S. S. and Dedication was a great day. Bible School went far beyond the best previous attendance. The offering at night of nearly $25 was for Home Missions. What do you think of that for a little Mission school of about 50 scholars?——In spite of rain the house was full for the dedicatory exercises in the afternoon. A little over $500 was pledged. Englewood, Ashland, Irving Park, Evanston, Sheffield Avenue, First and Jackson Boulevard Churches were represented in the offering. Individuals from Monroe Street, Austin, Hyde Park and perhaps others gave. The little church was greatly cheered by this kindly fellowship giving.

The Abberley-Powell Meeting.

The Central Church of Indianapolis has had a season of refreshing in a month's meeting (in the simultaneous campaign) held by R. W. Abberley, of Cincinnati, as evangelist, and Mrs. J. E. Powell, of Bloomington, Ill., as singer. The majority of the 183 additions were adults and heads of families. Our membership was stirred to activity as never before and we now have a larger and better conception of what we ought constantly to be doing in looking after the people within the sphere of our influence.

I had never heard Brother Abberley preach until he came to us. He proved himself a strong, self-possessed and satisfying man. He has the English instinct for a finished sermon, homiletically speaking. His analysis is clear and complete. His points are all buttressed by Scripture, illustrated by anecdote and incident and often beautifully reflected in some hymn or poetry quoted, of which he seems to have an exhaustless store. His voice is pleasant and well modulated. He rarely rises into impassioned discourse but when he does it makes a much greater impression than if "tearing a passion to tatters" were a common thing with him. His sermons average better than any one's I have listened to. There is nothing of the professional evangelist, so-called, about him, but his appeal is strong and convincing. You will be sure to have a "protracted meeting" if you get Abberley. Our people were delighted with him and many preachers came to listen to him, a number of them young men studying for the ministry. In many respects he is a good model for young men. Another point in which Brother Abberley sets a good example is, that he does not attempt difficult intellectual "stunts."

Of Mrs. Powell I am glad to say that her presence as well as her singing was a great help to the meeting. Always dignified and sympathetic, she endeared herself to many and was popular with all because of her sincere devotion to the work. Her sweet songs will linger long in memory.

The Hastings Meeting.

A three weeks' meeting with the home forces of the Hastings (Neb.) church closed with 34 added to the Lord, the majority by primary obedience, and all but four or five were adults and a number of heads of families. The plain, direct preaching of the Old Story by Pastor R. A. Schell, who has recently come upon the field, has won again and has opened up an unlimited field for future work. The music was in charge of Professor Ralph E. Boileau, of this congregation. Within the present year this congregation has enlarged the present building at an expense of over $1,000 and purchased a choice lot for $4,000 upon which it is planned to erect a new church building within the next few years.

J. H. Galloway.

Wheeling (W. Va.) Island Church.

This church has just been passing through a season of refreshing. A sad calamity came just about the time plans laid for a revival with W. H. Pinkerton as evangelist were to be executed, viz.: the death of C. Manley Rice, the pastor, and G. S. Naylor, the senior elder. Sept. 9. I was called to do some supply work. Grasping the true situation I agreed to take the pastorate of the church for a time. In a few weeks we had over $600 in the bank for our meeting. Brother Pinkerton came. It took two full weeks to wake the church up to catch the vision of this modern Josiah, but they finally saw it and our old men had dreams in broad daylight and our young men saw visions at noon time. Brother Pinkerton, while in the pulpit, bends his tall body forward, stretches out his long arms, opens his great hands, mouth and heart until he embraces his audience, lifts them to a wondrous vision of the Christ, whom seeing, men desire to accept and imitate. Two great mass meetings were held at one of the opera houses with far-reaching results. Mrs. C. A. Hill had charge of the music. Although this was Mrs. Hill's first attempt at singing since her long illness Brother Pinkerton expresses his fullest satisfaction with her work. The meeting resulted in 60 additions and $1,050 were raised the last night to apply on the church debt. Brother Pinkerton was asked to return in May when a large tabernacle will be built and a great meeting expected.

The Christmas Spirit.—Luke 2:8-20.

DAILY READINGS.

W. The Visit of the Shepherds.	Luke 2:15-20.
T. The Visit of the Wise Men.	Matt. 2:1-12.

S. The Wonderful Name.	Isaiah 9:1-7.

"O never failing splendor!
O never silent song!
Still keep the green earth tender,
Still keep the gray earth strong."

In all the wide world it will be true that the happiest among the celebrants of Christmastide will be those who have given most rather than those who have received most.

The purse may be so thin that our Christmas gift may lie lightly on the scales and yet they may be so surcharged with love that in God's sight and in the opinion of the recipient they may be heavier than loveless stars.

There is no Christmas for him whose heart is not at peace with all mankind. He may be warred against, but he must not be warring if he would have fellowship with those angels singing, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good-will among men, in whom he is well pleased."

Benevolence is inextricably a part of the Christmas spirit. No sooner had God given to those shepherds of Bethlehem the world's first Christmas gift till they began sharing it with all—"And when they saw it they made known concerning the same which was spoken to them about this child." Our best expression of thanks for the blessings of Christmas and all others will be our sharing them with those having not.

Fear is one element of the true Christmas spirit—"And the glory of the Lord shone round about them and they were sore afraid." As our own figure casts a shadow on the glory of the Lord shining around us at Christmas time, may we have a saving fear of our own unworthiness and in penitential tears and Jesus' blood wash away our own guilt, and be pure in His sight as the angels who first sang the Nativity.

There is no other gift many of us grown older in the affairs of life would prize more highly through these Christmas days than to see again these angels such as the shepherds saw hovering over the storied hills of Bethlehem and such as in fond fancy we ourselves saw in childhood's innocent days. O ruby lipped, pink cheeked, radiant winged, angel bands, come again with your sweet songs and heavenly chorus and enchant our eyes to the skies and in all ways lure us home!

The Danger of Apostasy.—Heb. 6:4-6.

"A charge to keep I have,
A God to glorify,
A never-dying soul to save,
And fit it for the sky.

"To serve the present age,
My calling to fulfill;
O, may it all my powers engage
To do my Master's will!

"Arm me with jealous care,
As in thy sight to live;
And O, thy servant, Lord, prepare
A strict account to give!

"Help me to watch and pray,
And on thyself rely,
Assured, if I my trust betray,
I shall forever die."

There are many apostates whose statements of belief are faultless; they can formulate scholarly statements of doctrine, but they are apostates—"their hearts are far from me"; they know but do not do; they believe but do not live.

Paul asks no more of others than he himself did to maintain loyalty to the Crucified. He testifies, "I buffet my body and keep it under subjection lest having preached the Gospel to others, I myself should become a castaway." This emphasizes that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty in Jesus, even for those who have looked through rifted skies and held converse face to face with Christ.

To realize our constant peril of apostasy, look around. In every community are aged men and women who in earlier years were devout, enthusiastic, sacrificing, disciples on whose altars the fires have burned low and whose ardor has grown dim amidst the falling shadows and mists of age. The heavenly inheritance that once was theirs by right of faith and sacrifice is falling out of their grasp, and they seem unconscious of profound loss. "Be thou faithful unto death and thou shalt receive the crown of life."

Among the awful words of the Scriptures are these: "It is impossible to renew them again unto repentance: seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh and put him to open shame." It is not ours to philosophize about this dictum, but to accept it as a statement of truth from on high. Let us know that it is fearfully true that having once been enlightened and made partakers of the heavenly gifts, we can leave them and have no more ties binding us to the throne and the life eternal.

Paul is referring in the lesson to apostates, who had once enjoyed sweet spiritual privileges—"They were once enlightened" and "tasted the heavenly gift" and "were made partakers of the Holy Spirit," and "tasted the good word of God and the powers of the age to come," but notwithstanding all "fell away." Surely if such blessings did not anchor those first century disciples fast to the faith and the throne we of the twentieth century ought to give the more earnest heed to the things we have heard and felt and tasted lest haply we drift away from them.

There is one apostasy of heart and another of mind, and they are different. David's frequent apostasies were of the former sort. Sin's dangerous blasts frequently diverted his course from God, but his heart was true, and when the sudden tempest ended, like the needle that points again to the polar star when the intruding finger is removed, he stands forth loyal and devout. "For Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica," portrays the other. With Demas it is a settled conviction that the Christian life is not worth while. There is hope for the Davids, but only "farewells" for the Demases. And yet the Davids must strive unto blood against sin.

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and, mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy.

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

Jesus Ascends Into Heaven.—Luke 24:36-53.

Memory verses: 46-48.

Golden Text.—While he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven. Luke 24:51.

During the forty days which intervened between the resurrection and the ascension, Jesus appeared seven times, according to the records of the evangelists. In the following list of the appearances, with the gospels in which they are narrated, note how incomplete is any one gospel by itself:

1. To the women at the tomb. (Matt., John.)
2. On way to Emmaus. (Mark.)
3. To the ten at Jerusalem. (Luke, John.)
4. To the eleven, including Thomas. (Mark, John.)
5. To seven by Sea of Galilee. (John.)
6. To eleven on a mountain in Galilee. (Matt.)
7. The ascension. (Mark, Luke.)

Mark's account of the ascension is given in the closing verses which were probably not a part of the original gospel. Luke's account of that remarkable event therefore stands alone.

The nature of this miracle we need not discuss. The ideas of "up" and "down" with reference to extra-terrestrial space do not mean as much to us as they meant when the Ptolemaic astronomy was in vogue. We feel less justified in feeling that heaven is always directly "up" from us, in view of the fact that up from the other side of the globe would be precisely the opposite direction in space.

But these quibbles touch only the physical envelope and not the spiritual kernel of the matter. In regard to the resurrection we said that the great fact was that, in some way, and quite against their expectations, the disciples received the undying conviction that, in spite of his crucifixion, their Master was not a dead but a living Lord. This was not primarily a fact for science or history. It was primarily a fact for faith. So now, in some way, the men who were nearest to Jesus, reached the conviction that the one whom they had gradually learned to know as the Son of God, was again with his Father.

Both of these facts are not only supported historically by all the evidence that is available, but also supported spiritually by the experience of the apostles and of millions of disciples in all subsequent ages. The testimony of the Christian consciousness is that we have a living Lord who, as our mediator and intercessor, stands in the presence of God.

J. P. Myers, a successful pastor of Paulding, O., is available for an occasional meeting; at present he is immediately available. His success in this line of work argues that he should be kept busy all the time.

Our churches in Steuben county, Indiana, are desirous of securing an evangelist to give all his time to that field. The salary will be from $800 to $1,200 per year, according to ability. He mnst be a man of character and must have had sufficient success in this line of work to commend him to the brethren. Address Vernon Stauffer, Angola, Ind.

W. G. Johnson, Roanoke, Va., who has had unusual success, both as a settled minister and as an evangelist, desires to locate. Here is an ideal man for some good church.

R. R. Hamlin, Fort Worth, Texas, is giving all his time to evangelistic work, having recently resigned his church in that city. He is one of the ablest in our recent accessions to the evangelistic ranks and is capable of holding good meetings in our greatest churches. We cheerfully commend him to the consideration of the brethren.

The western half of the great state of Washington is in need of an absolutely first-class evangelist. The brethren desire a man whose spiritual qualities will be as marked as his purely evangelistic traits. This is one of the greatest fields in America and is worthy of one of the best men. Write to Mrs. J. A. C. Merriman, 1116 Bishop Court, Spokane, Wash.

Miss Una Dell Berry, Lafayette, Ind., has resigned as pastoral helper and intends spending all her time in the work of singing evangelist. She is one of the best soloists in our brotherhood; her singing being very much like that of Mrs. Princess Long's. Write her at 527 Wood street.

C. M. Farnham, Newbury, Ind., is giving all his time to holding meetings and has a few dates for winter and spring and would be pleased to hear of places desirous of meetings.

Brother Flourney Payne recently resigned at Berkeley Church, Denver, and is available for work in almost any part of the country. He has succeeded both in Denver and Baltimore, Md.

J. Frank Green, Mt. Pleasant, Mich., has finished his term of service with the church in that place and is ready for work elsewhere. He is a good man with a successful record.

L. E. Murray, Middletown, Ind., is available for evangelistic work. He prefers going to the southwest.

Old Scotty on Theology.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

I ain't much fur theology an' don't know much about it nohow, but it 'peers to me that we ain't on the rite track when good religious papers have so much stuff that don't do nobody any good. You know that the Disciples (excuse the big D) is a-gettin' to be a mighty powerful people, an' quite respectful in the eyes of uther folks. We had a grate convention way off at Buffalo, near where the Falls is, an' say! what do you think? After it was over or perhaps befor, if some of them fellers didn't go an' pile rite on to Bro. Cooper, an' ther was nuthin' to make people do it, except some folks ain't never satisfied unless they are a-steppin' round a-lookin' for a chip on some body's shoulder, an' if they can't find one, they pick up anything an' hit at it. Now, I read not long ago in that splendid paper, the "Standard"—always read in our house first—how in about seven pages of good space, an elder in a De Fence, tried with tears an' sighs, as it were, to save a church. The preacher was one of them there smart Alecks what works so hard but knows too much, a higher kritter so to speak. Now, elders ot to always keep kopies of letters fur themselves so they can tell what they write. Do you remember the big meetin' they had? There set the town preachers in a row acrost our pulpit—the horrid sects—an' perhaps a-laffin' in there sleeves. Jes' like 'em. That "presiding elder"—well, is that the New Testament name? Well, he was a queer chap to be a preacher an' preach "Ther ain't no hell any more." Perhaps he came from Ann Arbor fur they sing that ther when they beat in foot-ball. Now, I ain't a-goin' to say wher the troubel was, fur I don't know, only I am sorrie they had such a time. But I think we ot to pass a law that elders ot to be in fur jes' so long, an' if the church wanted them agen, why, put 'em in agen. An election is always better than a quarrel.

I got anuther thing to say. That man from Harper, Kan., has got that higher kriticism all straightened out. Why, it is a "psychic phenomenon," pure and simple. All of them fellers—critics—every one, no exception (take a long breth now—Garrison, Peckham, Willett, Ames, S. Jones, Gates, C. M. Sharp, B. A. Jenkins, Rowlison, Hieronymus, etc.) are "egotists of the most intense and absurd type." Now, you see what learnin' an' education does. No, it is that "psychic phenomenon" that makes you an' all uther higher critics act up so. Do you know the meanin' of these big words? The Kansas man tells us "it is a species of hysteria or hallucination, perpetuating itself by suggestion upon the subjective faculties of men." This makes men "dreamers," who don't say nuthin' back, or do nuthin' but jes' let on like you don't see artikles by men who are tryin' to enlighten people. How unsimpathetic an' unkind higher kritics are! They are in the subjective case while some folks is in the objective case. Now, I know sum of these dreamers an' sum I don't. I know that Bro. Garrison is too busy writin' good things to waste time in enterin' the arena to defend himself. He found out long ago that there ain't no Christianity in that. Bro. Willett is too busy teachin', preachin', bringin' folks into the kingdom of God—immersin' every one of 'em too—an' gettin' redy fur a trip to Palestine, to bother hisself with things that don't need to be done. The sort of religion this ole world wants ain't the disputin' kind, but a lovin' kind. Not the kind that is a-pullin' all the time, but the kind that is a-liftin'. We say we love each uther, but it ain't the kind of love that the Carpenter of Nazareth had fur men.

Now, this is all I have to say, Mister Editor, this time, only I am glad to know what higher kriticism is. It is a releef after tryin' to find out what the kritter looked like. Thanks. It is a "psychic phenomenon."

An Appeal to Women From an Eclipsed Man.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

It is not often that I feel inspired, really inspired; but whenever I am in that condition, I must write, or talk to some one who will listen, and I have picked you out from among some fifteen million men in the United States to mention the matter that is upon my mind.

I have been in New York City for about five or six weeks, and, as my custom is, I have regularly attended church services, especially on the Lord's day. For a few weeks I attended our churches on 56th street and on 119th street, but lately I have been visiting around, seeing how other folks conduct their services, and hearing some of the great divines.

Now it so happens that the people out here are not aware of the fact that I am a great preacher (!) and ought to be given some prominent seat, either on the pulpit or "up front," where I would be both comfortable and conspicuous, so I have had to enter the sanctuary and take what ordinary folks who go to church get fifty-two times a year (if they go that often), and in doing this, I have learned a great deal that I never knew before.

I will not trespass upon your valuable time to mention a great many things that have impressed me; but will confine this inspired epistle to the consideration of one subject, namely, the average woman's hat in church.

At first I attended our 56th street church, and I believe the first Lord's day I had an open view; but the second time I attended that church, a very sweet and beautiful young lady sat in front of me with a hat on her head about two feet in diameter, and try as hard as I could, I just could not see either around, over or through that hat, so I gave it up and heard Brother Bates deliver a splendid sermon as one would hear some great preacher through the means of a phonograph.

Well, the first Lord's day I attended our 119th street church two ladies sat in front of me with what would be considered very ordinary hats—not more than a foot and a half in diameter, but they "conspired" against me, and as they were much in conversation during the sermon, their heads were so close together that the two hats shut off my view entirely, and again I had a phonographic sermon by Brother Lichtenberger.

Then I began visiting about a little and I observed that the higher up I went in church society, the higher and wider and more top-heavy was the head-gear of the daughters of men, or more properly speaking, the daughters of millionaires. At what is called Mr. Rockefeller's church I just gave up in despair at once, as I was seated way back behind a wilderness of hats—hats! HATS!! HATS!!! Never saw so many hats before in my life, and I almost had the blind staggers before the service was half through. In this church they have just called a new minister, a Mr. Aked from England, and I "heard the voice, but saw no man." I saw him after the service was over, so am reasonably sure that he preached in person, but could not make oath to it.

When last Lord's day arrived says I to myself, says I, "I'll just go over to hear a preacher who is much spoken of, who preaches for a congregation of poor folks, and maybe the wash-women there will have shawls over their heads and I will get a chance to see and to hear." But I was a little late and the usher gave me a nice seat in the extreme back of the church, but fortunately no one was in the seat just in front of me, and I fairly revelled in sight seeing, as one who had been healed of blindness. Alas, alas, I enjoyed that blessed vision only about five minutes when a late comer was shown the seat just in front of me, and she was a poorly clad girl with a very ordinary hat on; but the hat had a green bunch of drooping feathers that waved right in front of me—between me and the preacher, and I know she moved her head and tossed that green plume a hundred times a minute, until I could neither see nor hear anything. My eyes pained me so that I closed them for long periods, but as soon as I opened them again, that same green plume was waving defiance in my face, so I finally gave up in despair and left.

It is unnecessary that I go on and multiply cases, which I could do. I have said enough to make my case, and now I plead for reforms in the style of hats worn by women in church, and ask you to take your pen in hand and "suggest" the inconvenience to others, and maybe our great, great grand-daughters will do differently.

As every one knows, the state laws compel women to remove their hats in theaters and other places of amusement, where people would not stand for such interference after they had paid to see and to hear. So why would it not be becoming to the gentler sex to be a little considerate in this matter? If the Apostle Paul's admonition is still understood to apply to such cases, then let our women devise some "dear little bonnet" that will fit so close and not in the least interfere with the view of those behind them.

I will not attempt to describe the modern hat in all of its shapes and glory; but if you or any one else will look over the next audience (if it is a bright day, especially), you will see—oh, I won't begin to catalog the multitude of things of all sizes, shapes, colors and texture that one will see on the beautiful heads of our lovely women.

I guess I've said enough to give you a start on this subject, and I hope you will have the courage (or audacity) to open your big guns on this great and inconsiderate evil.

McCURDY.

Melissa A. McCurdy (maiden name Deck), died at her late home near Edmond, Okla., Nov. 17. She was a daughter of Isaac and Leah Deck. and was born near Alton, Ill., Aug. 6, 1850. She was married to Joseph McCurdy Dec. 31, 1872. The burial was at Bunker Hill, Ill. Sister McCurdy was a faithful member of the Dorchester church until its disruption in 1897. J. E. MASTERS.

Dorchester, Ill.

TANKSLEY.

William Albros, second born of Bro. and Sister R. H. Tanksley, of the church at Mound Valley, Kan., went home to God on his eighth birthday, November 16, 1906. He was a bright boy, leading his class in school, but was promoted to be happy in a heavenly company. Brother Tanksley was with us when our only boy, Errett, went home New Year's day, this year. May the Lord comfort the sorrowing ones. E. E. LOWE.

CROSS.

Robert Gollop Cross, who died November 5, 1906, was born in Axminster, England, April 6, 1833. At the age of 20 he came to America, first to Canada and later to the United States, making his home in Nashville, Tenn. He fought through the civil war with bravery, for which he was awarded many places of honor and trust. Brother Cross was for a number of years a consistant member of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, but on September 4, 1904, he was baptized into Christ and united with the Christian church. This godly man found much happiness in his Christian life. In a recent talk with him about the story of his gallant life he said: "I can not understand why our young men and women put off the acceptance of Christ so long. The call is urgent and we need good strong men and women to press forward this great and glorious work." He is survived by a devoted wife and two daughters, who for many years have been members of the Christian church. Many friends join these dear ones in tenderest sympathy in their hour of grief. B. F. ARCHER.

Rome, Ga.

FRAZIER.

William Frazier was born in Shelby county, Kentucky, September 23, 1828. At the age of nine years he came with his father to Lincoln county, Missouri, settling near New Hope. The most of his life service was spent in Lincoln county, except sixteen years in Colusa, California and two years in Iowa. His father died when William was fifteen years old and for many years the care of the family fell upon him. He confessed his faith in his divine Lord and Savior under the preaching of Elder Joseph Errett at New Hope. Brother Frazier was united in marriage to Fannie Blanton in the early 50's, which union continued about six years. His second marriage was with Sarah Robinson, and several years later he was again called to part with a loved companion. His last marriage was to Orpha Virginia Cash, nee Brown, on November 16, 1873, and his death occurred on the thirty-third anniversary of this marriage, November 16, 1906.

In his death we have lost one of nature's noblemen, a generous friend, a genial companion, a man of true and honest purpose, of sound judgment, prompt in action, faithful in matters of truth, an earnest and devoted Christian worker and an ardent lover of the plea for the union of all of God's children. Let us ever treasure the memory of his blameless Christian life, his wise counsels, his faithful warning, and his zeal for the cause of Christ. We deeply sympathize with his widow. The funeral was held in the church of which Brother Frazier was a much beloved elder for many years, on November 17. Rev. B. D. Kennedy, pastor of the Troy Presbyterian church, offered a memorial tribute followed by the pastor of the church, E. G. Merrill. The body was then laid to rest in the Troy cemetery. E. G. MERRILL.

On the Line.

Do not surrender, e'en though stricken down;
  The battle's never lost
'Till you admit defeat. The fates may frown
  And sorely tried and crossed
Your wounded soul and weary may still cry
  Against all further strife;
But—it remains always to bravely die—
  Else, little worth were life.

"A man must live;"
  That is the coward's cry,
Excuse that recreants for their actions give;
  Let us be brave and say, "A man must die,"
And so die worthily, with front to foe
  And striving still; aye, to the latest breath.
Is it not better, mortal, thus to go,
  Paying to God his debt, a true man's death?

Death comes to all; must come; why, then, postpone,
  By craven suppliance to the things we hate,
The inevitable end. Is death itself alone
  The dreadful fact of life? Should we await
The hurts, the chains, dishonor and disgrace
  That do attend on yielding? In God's plan,
Whose is the higher and the nobler place,
  Who lives a slave; or dies free—and a man?

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

The Last Chapter.

The next morning Raymund returned to the Laclede hotel in time to take breakfast with Rhoda. She was full of bright information about their old friends; she had been to sit with Miss Glory Aggency again, and the old lady was much more at her ease with her than she had been when the orphan was a little girl. She told about Wizzen, and said, "You must be sure to go to see him."

"Of course I shall," said Raymund with a smile, "but in the meantime—how would you like to go for a walk with me—not to see anybody, you understand, except each other?"

Rhoda thought she should like that very much, so they set forth and having lingered past their old home, with softened reminders of their mother, they came to the stream at the edge of town over which the railroad started on its way to Kansas City. There was a wagon bridge farther down, and when they were half-across, Raymund stopped. All this time he had been carrying his valise, but now he placed it upon the dusty floor. They leaned upon the railing and watched the swirling water as they had watched it in childhood. Raymund suddenly turned his face to Rhoda and asked her to tell him how she had learned that she was not his sister.

"It was while I was at Fulton," Rhoda answered gravely. "A gentleman called at the dormitory who proved to be an old acquaintance of my mother's. He was Mr. Horace Bridgewaite."

"The promoter!" Raymund exclaimed; "yes, I've met him."

"I supposed so," Rhoda nodded gravely. "Many years ago—at least they seem many years ago,—a man had come to me at Crawley—the creature named Boggs—and had let fall words that hinted of a bronze vase, which in some way concerned us."

"You never told me that," Raymund remarked.

"No, I thought it best not to disturb your mind with useless imaginings. Brother Bellfield advised the same course. Well, this Mr. Horace Bridgewaite was boarding where our mother boarded in St. Louis, when a bronze vase was given you. It was from me, but of course I was so little that our parents did the giving. Anyway, the name on it was Rhoda. Your father had asked that the inscription, 'From Rhoda to Raymund' be engraved on the vase, but through a mistake only my name was put on it. And that is how he showed me that you was not the son of—of my mother. I mean, I am Rhoda Revore, but you are Raymund White. Even had he said otherwise, I must have always known that I am Rhoda Revore. Something within seems to tell me that I could have no mother but the one we both called by that dear name."

"That's exactly the way I feel about her," said Raymund. "And it may astonish you a good deal to learn that Mr. Bridgewaite told me the word 'Raymund' was on that vase, and not 'Rhoda!'"

Rhoda stared incredulously. "Why, Raymund! I was so sure my name was on that vase, and so afraid he would go and tell you, that I gave him the $150 Uncle William gave me, to bind him to secrecy."

"The wretch," muttered Raymund.

"I knew how it would grieve you," Rhoda went on with exceeding gentleness, "to learn that you are only mother's adopted child. I would have given more than that, if I'd had it—indeed, Mr. Bridgewaite wanted more—to have kept the truth from you."

"But, Rhoda," Raymund expostulated, "Mr. Bridgewaite told me, and only a few days ago, that my name is on that vase! And mother's letter says that whosever's name is on that vase, that one is her only child."

Rhoda began to tremble and her face turned deathly pale. She grasped the bridge-railing for support, and stared dumbly at the other.

"Now, Rhoda," said Raymund slowly, "listen attentively, for all depends upon your decision; I think it is pretty evident that we cannot believe that promoter, no matter what he says. He has contradicted himself, and even if he hadn't, we could neither of us accept his word as final, because each feels—at least I feel, I am the only child of our dear mother; and you tell me you feel the same about yourself."

"Oh, yes!" Rhoda gasped.

"You wondered why I went to St. Louis," Raymund continued. "It was to dig up that bronze vase."

"Did you do so?" she asked quickly.

"I did."

"Whose name is on it?"

"I do not know."

Still trembling with suspense, she looked at him for an explanation.

"I carried a bag to the cellar," Raymund said, speaking every word slowly, and all the time keeping his eyes upon the other, "and as soon as it was dug up, I put it in the bag. I carried it to my hotel, and washed it thoroughly in the bath tub, having first bound my eyes with a handkerchief to prevent myself from seeing the inscription. In washing away the dirt, my hand encountered the first letter of the name. It was a rounded capital 'R.' After that, I was extremely careful not to touch that place. When the vase was clean and dry, I put it in another bag and then removed my bandage. I carried it to a work shop and ordered it to be cut in two, the separate halves to be done up securely and then given me. During the process I left as if upon business. When I came back, the work was finished. In this valise are the bowl and the pedestal, in different covers, just as I received them from the workman."

Raymund stooped and opened the valise He tore off the wrapper from the bowl and presented it to Rhoda. He then took up the pedestal but did not remove the wrapper. "Rhoda," he said with emotion, "this pedestal tells which of us is the adopted child. Shall I open the parcel?"

"No," said Rhoda faintly.

"Each of us claim that beloved mother," said Raymund, his voice trembling. "But when this inscription has once been seen, one of us can never claim that proud privilege again."

"Do not open it," Rhoda whispered.

"The one whose name is not on this pedestal," said Raymund, "is the inheritor of a vast fortune. We have but to look at this name, to know which of us can claim Mr. White's millions. But that one cannot claim Mrs. Revore as a mother. That is why she told us on her deathbed, that the knowledge of the secret might make us rich, and at the same time very unhappy. Do you agree with me, dear"—he had studiously avoided any show of affection since learning that she was not his sister, but now he spoke tenderly, quite unconscious that he did so—"Do you agree with me, dear, that there is something in this world of more value than millions?"

"I do," said Rhoda, her eyes glowing. "Oh, Raymund, I am so proud of you, so proud, oh, so proud!" She burst into tears.

Raymund handed her the pedestal. "Dear Rhoda," he said softly, "the stream beneath our feet will hide the secret forever."

Rhoda dropped the pedestal, still in its brown paper wrapping, over the railing. It splashed in the water. Ripple after ripple was sent from the spot till they were lost among the high flags along the banks.

"Now," said Raymund, "this upper part of the bronze vase belongs equally to us both, for we are both to claim the mother of our childhood as the mother of our maturity. No one will ever know which one of us is related to her by right of birth; but we know that each has an equal right of love. We will cherish this part of the bronze vase as long as we live.

And so they did, for when, twelve years later, Jack Bellfield and Mrs. Jack Bellfield—a lady once known to her friends simply as Nelsie Loraine—visited the farm that had once been Mr. Omer's, and was now Raymund's, they found the upper portion of the bronze vase fastened high up on the wall in the sitting-room. Resting across the mouth of the bowl was Rhoda's first book of poems, just from the press.

"What you got that bronze vase up there for?" asked the brilliant young physician (we speak of Jack) who always addressed Raymund and Rhoda with the delightful familiarity of an old friend—a familiarity, to say truth, to which Mrs. Omer had never grown accustomed.

"That," said Rhoda with a smile, "is where we keep our marriage certificate."

My Friend Jack Louis.

BY S. S RETLAW.

We were college chums, Jack and I, and no finer young man attended the old North Western C. U. at Indianapolis. We were together in the geometry and rhetoric classes, members of the same (Pythonian) literary society, joined the church in the same great meeting, and always attended the young people's prayer meeting. I have no more vivid memory of that Monday night meeting than Jack's earnest prayer. I graduated a year ahead of Jack, on account of his enlistment in the army. He was older than I; and, so, old enough to enlist; whereas I was but 20 when the war closed. I thus gained a year on him, and there was the year's difference, when in 1866, the month of February, we enlisted in the good fight of faith.

We met a few times in meetings of the alumni, but otherwise I saw nothing of Louis after I entered the world as a teacher, and he as a scientific farmer. I had my turn as country teacher, village principal, county superintendent, college professor, normal instructor, expert institute worker, etc. And while in the course of this routine I one day chanced to meet Jack all rosy and plump, and showing that he had been well fed.

Of course, our greeting was cordial, and our talk ran on for an hour or more. Jack listened with admirable good manners to my recital, smiling over the pleasant features and dropping a tear over my sorrows; and then he told me of himself, of the best and sweetest wife in the world, and his three children; just beaming with pride as he recounted their graces. He had settled near his county seat, the popular young man of his country; and, while pursuing his course in agriculture, mingling with the young of his neighborhood, he incidentally fell in with Nettie Clare, who in his and her childhood had seemed the sweetest and prettiest of little girls. She had undergone that miracle of transmutation that takes place in the life of every lass, and now spoke maturely, and carried herself as a woman. Their glance was electric, and Jack was now a bondman.

The Clares were a good family, and Nettie was the flower of the family. Jack made timid advances, and Nettie blushingly encouraged them. In short, they were soon betrothed, and Jack put new energy into all his plans. All he lacked of naming the day for the nuptials was the assurance that he could properly provide for her.

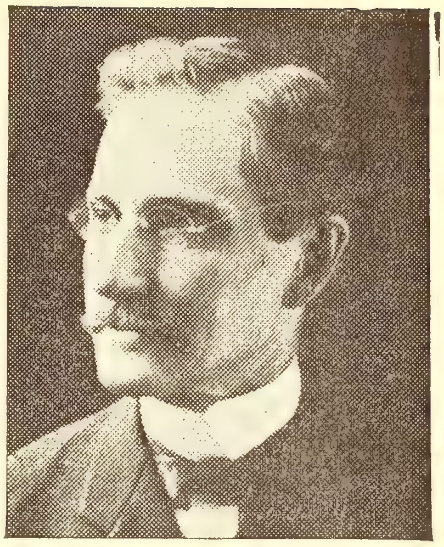
As the stars would have it, the county convention was at hand, and one of Jack's army chums proposed his name for treasurer. It was a popular chord; and he received the nomination, practically without effort on his part. As his party was "two to one" in the county his nomination had been regarded as equal to an election. But here is his pathetic story in his own words: "I virtually knew I would be elected, for there was only one township in the county in which my opponents had a majority. But try as I would, I could not rest contented. What if my opponent should prove more popular? What if he should spring a scandal against me? What if some unknown force should assail me, and I should be defeated? There is my Nettie to grieve and weep, and myself reduced to shame! And oh! think of it: another year or two before I could call her my very own! These reflections began to tell on my health and I lost many hours of sleep.

"One Lord's day evening I was out on the street, when I ought to have been in the church at worship. I had a headache—a true headache, and convinced my heart that I was staying out of the meeting house to take the air. But the serious fact was I staid out to see voters and hear their words of flattery and encouragement. In other words, I was soliciting votes; not, perhaps, in very words but in smiles and handshakes, and silly platitudes of esteem.

"The sermon must have been well on the way, and I had just made up my mind to go into the house, when a tough from Quarry township stepped out of an alley and squared himself before me. 'Hello, Jack!' 'Why, how are you, Ned!'—with an extension of my hand to shake his filthy member. 'How are you? And how's Quarry?'

"'Oh! Quarry's all hunk; but they's a few of us a-feelin' pretty all-fired dry.' And here he squeezed my hand and winked in the most supercilious fashion. I felt no heart either in my shake of that hand or in his address to me. In fact, I would have felt more comfortable had I been touching the cold skin of a toad.

"I was about to withdraw my hand and leave him, when he gave me a too familiar jerk and swore I was not in so great a hurry. Just then, too, a half dozen others came out of the alley, and seemed to me



REV. J. W. BLOSSER, M. D.

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga., is Meeting with Wonderful Success.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package and an illustrated book.

like so many vultures about to settle and begin to tear me.

"Ned was the leader; and when he appealed to the crowd with 'Is he, boys?' they answered in a breath: 'No! not by a long shot!'

"I then, in a hypocritical manner of sympathy and interest in their affairs put the question, 'Well, what can I do for you, boys?' They all looked at Ned, and he answered: 'Why, Jack, we want a drink, and we've lit on you as the chap to get it for us.' 'O, boys,' I answered, 'that will never do. I have nothing to give you for drinks.'

"'We all know that; but we know you kin git 'em, and we cain't!' 'Why, boys,' I answered, 'I never drink a drop myself, and I'm under a solemn pledge not to help any one to get a drink.'

"'D—n your pledge!' said the leader. 'Ef ye don't take no interest in Quarry township you kin go to thunder! Come orn, boys! Jack ain't our kind!' And the whole tough gang started away. Here was my supreme moment. 'Shall I lose Quarry Township? Why not have that, too?'—and I felt all my manhood leaving me. 'Say, boys! Isn't there some other way to fix this matter? I don't want you to be offended!'

"'Et's jist as you please! Et's a drink fer the crowd, right now, 'er yer cake's dough in Quarry!' I do not know why I did not despise the whole tramp of them; but I answered: 'If nothing else will do, come on!'

"I led them past the church, and hurried a little lest some of the brethren see me, and halted not till we reached the drug store door. There Ned alone followed me in, and I advanced to the druggist, with 'here, Doc, this gentleman wants a quart of rye whisky!'—throwing down a dollar. 'It is for medical purposes, of course?'

"And I drew my hat down over my eyes and answered 'yes!'

"I immediately hurried out and my very frame shook with excitement, as I darted off down the street; but not in time to avoid the cackle of exultation, meant for my coward ears.

"That night the six toughs made a pandemonium of our little city, and did not subside till they were all shut up in the station house. And I; I cried like a woman when I reached a lonely place; and begged the Lord to pardon my perjured soul. I walked the floor, and wrung my hands, and vowed repentance and it was not a moment that I slept until almost day-break. It was only after I clambered out of bed and on my kness promised my Maker on pain of death never to allow myself debauched again, that I slept at all. In the morning I wakened late; but I felt relieved. My vow had fixed it; and I did not believe I would ever violate it.

"But O, Retlaw, I was mortgaged to the Devil! And before noon, I had done the same thing over! In the course of the campaign I had prostituted my honor a hundred times. I never saw the slightest indication of interest on the part of the Quarry gang; and I had only the usual vote in that township; and in the other townships I had no more than the usual majority. I was elected, and re-elected; and in my two terms, I have made thirty thousand dollars; but I would gladly give it all if I could get back again the peace of mind I enjoyed when we used to sing and pray in the old chapel prayer meeting."

A Sunset.*

A picture, eh? Methinks not long ago
One eve at sunset on a mount that lo!
As rare a scene unfolded as man's eyes
Have ever witnessed in the sea or skies.
Calm 'twas—Far out upon the waters lay
Sailboats at rest. The breezes of the day
Gave place to nature's quiet and the deep
Calm and untroubled waited as in sleep.
Beauty! If ever from a mountain's brow
Mine eyes beheld it I behold it now,
As I recall the memories of that sky,
So filled with marvels for my wondering eye,
Such colors blended! Crimson, red and gold,
Canvas ne'er yet hath yielded power to hold.
Clouds sun-appareled! Yet did some appear
Dark and prophetic that a storm was near.
We watched it there together—you and I
Daylight's departing glory—Saw day die
Saw the great orb which lighted up the day
Dip into darkest cloud and sink away—
A picture wouldst? Well, if I should incline
To label one so matchless and so fair
I'd call it God's most perfect, most divine,
And bow my head and bathe my soul in prayer.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

This week, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are presented with the very last (or, in the language of modern orators, the last, final and concluding) chapter of the "Bronze Vase." Some will doubtless be glad that it is the last, final and concluding chapter of that story. Where is the gentleman from Blooming Grove, Tex., who chortled with glee when "A Week With the Woodneys" finished its protracted span? Let him now hold another thanksgiving service. (The reader will observe how his scathing denunciation still rankles.) But those who liked the "Bronze Vase" may be pleased to know that there is another story in the air. I will tell you more about it next week. Here comes a letter from one of our religious houses: "Dear Friend—You want a book by E. L. Powell, the famous orator of the Christian Church of Louisville, Ky." (Yes, sir; I didn't know it, but I suppose I do. I wish he wanted one of my books, and would get one of 'em. The Christian Publishing Company handles four: "King Saul," "In the Days of Jehu," "Shem" and "Adnah," the last two being novels of adventure.) The letter continues: "We have one to give free." (Now, I like that and am sorry I can't return the compliment. Famous novelists, however, are worse handicapped financially than famous orators; at least that's the explanation I have thought out.) "It is beautifully bound, it is highly commended. This offer is made only to preachers." (Then why was this alluring prospect held out to me? Why whet my appetite thus, then place the dish out of my reach? This is mockery, and there is no need to finish the epistle.) I have recently received illustrated post cards representing Billings' Library, Burlington, Vt., and the Public Libraries of Joplin, Moberly and Chicago. The one at Moberly is by far the most attractive to my eyes, for I prefer a choice collection of books to additional stories and stone pillars; and the card from Moberly informs me that "Jehu," "Adnah" and "Shem" are in that library. Here also is a card from foreign parts, beginning, "La Colonia Americana tiene el honor de invitar a Ud. y a su apreciable familia al Baile." In other words, I am invited by the American colony to a ball in the Escuela Santa Marina: but as I do not dance, nor any of my "apreciable" family, I shall remain in Arkansas. Our orphan Charlie writes from St. Louis: "I have been planning to write to you for the last two weeks." (It must certainly have taken deep scheming on your part to plot your way to a final triumph.) "I received your picture. Felix seems to be taking it easy." (Charlie refers to a kodak sketch, not to the picture which has been so long promised the A. S. As for that picture, we are still waiting for the "cut." It has been a long, long time since Felix sat, or, rather, squatted for the photographer, but we trust to get his likeness upon this page in his life-time. I may be accused of a too hopeful disposition, but you know cats can throw away several lives and still have enough to go on. Charlie, excuse, me; I forgot you were talking.) "It has not been very cold in St. Louis yet. How about the Arkansas hills?" (They are wet to-day.) "I think my ice cream social was a great success, and I hope the Christmas tree for Drusie will do as much more. I am studying hard on my books, especially on grammar and spelling. I got 99½ in writing and the same in deportment; that is as high as our teacher gives, therefore it is as near perfect as we can get." (That reminds me of keeping the clock a few minutes fast to make ourselves hurry. We never have the time exactly right, but we aren't late, unless we make too great an allowance.) "I never got any lower than 95. We are having evangelistic services at our church. There have been several additions already (November 7). I guess you read in the papers where Rev. Sam P. Jones' died." (Charlie and I heard Mr. Jones lecture, when our orphan was here last summer. Mr. Jones, who was a personal friend, reviewed old times and was as genial and kind [off the platform] as we had ever known him. On the platform he was—Sam Jones.) J. D. Dillard writes from Agency, Mo.: "I inclose you 50c to go on Charlie's Educational Fund, from two little boys near Wellington, Mo.—Earl and James A. Emerson. Did you get my money order ($5) from the Grandin Inter. C. E. Society? I guess I missed the paper telling about it." (I guess you did, too. Why, I told all about that $5 and about my family's friendship for you, and how we missed your yearly visits to Plattsburg when you came to take collections for the Orphan Home. I have received interest on annuity bond from Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, who sends me best wishes; and this is addressed to Plattsburg, Mo. That reminds me of a minister who recently made Bentonville, and who said: "I just felt that I had to meet J. Breckenridge Ellis. I'd heard of him for years, but I didn't have any idea he was down in Arkansas." This is fame. Reader, seek for it not. 'Tis but a bubble, my word for it.)

Mabel E. Nicholas, Fort Collins, Colo.: "Inclosed please find my first quarterly Av. S. report. I enjoy keeping the rules and think it is helpful as we become better acquainted with the Bible and can easier find the references that our Sunday-school teachers give us for test questions." (By the way, that sounds as if there were something going on in that Sunday-school.) "I have interested another little girl so she has commenced keeping the Advance Society rules, and I hope she will prove faithful. Brother Findley is our pastor and we think him the best in the land. Our town has a population of 8,000. It is four miles east of the mountains. It is a pleasant trip to go there and take dinner and spend the day." Eva Mildred Coors, Russellville, Ark.: "Inclosed find $6.30 for Drusie's Christmas tree. Some of our teachers have been telling us of Drusie and the tree, and the Sunday-school superintendent suggested that we donate the collection of two Sundays as a present to Drusie. We hope other Sunday-schools will follow our example, and that Drusie will have a thousand dollar tree." (Please observe how wo do things down in Arkansas. As for the Sunday-school here at Bentonville, it has pledged itself to raise $100 on the $4,000 church debt. Every penny of the big debt is provided for, but you can see the excuse we have for not doing outside work. But if your church hasn't a debt of $4,000 on it, why not imitate the example of Russellville?) Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo.: "Here I am with my thirty-second report and our mite for Drusie. Mamma sends 25c to buy ribbon with, so you can tie Mr. Seat's boxes of candy on the tree. Papa sends 10c for a handkerchief, and I send 25c for stationary. If Drusie's like me, that is something she can find use for. May God's richest blessings rest upon Drusie, Charlie and all the Av. S. members." Mrs. Dora Griffith, Emida, Idaho: "I have come to Charlie's ice cream social and will take a back seat right beside Sister Gibbins. Give me $2.50 worth if ice cream. It's like the Savior's wine, the last is best, and Charlie will appreciate it just as much. I also send $2.50 for Drusie; put a parasol on the Christmas tree for Drusie, as I imagine it may be raining about Christmas time. I appreciate very much the letters Drusie sends me from China. Such faith as hers will never be forsaken. The Lord give her strength and courage."

Drusie R. Malott, North China: "THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST grows more interesting every day. Do you remember that I wrote about our missionaries' children, and how we hold a Sunday-school? We meet together each Tuesday and each Friday evening to read a story and have prayer together. We have been reading 'Probable Sons,' but let me tell you they are more interested in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST than the books, and each time they want the 'Bronze Vase' and the Av. S. Letters read before anything else. Their first question on meeting days is, 'Did you get another paper?' And now, about our work: The boys from the boys' school went home one by one for the summer. How I wish you could have seen the bright, manly lads and heard them sing. Last Easter they sang for us 'Christ Arose.' It was the first time I had ever heard that sung by Chinese. Do you not realize how much that meant to me? But, of course, you do! Think of how you would feel to hear that song from fifty boys who were heathen one year ago! Pray for our missionaries out here; that will strengthen and inspire them, for the greatest work the Lord can do in our midst. Pray the Lord to raise up more faithful native helpers to witness in each of our twelve stations. I forward receipt for the Av. S. $5. May the Lord bless each one who gave a part, and each one who is praying for me. Little Lawrence Grimes has a light case of smallpox; the family are under quarantine. Smallpox is very common here. The Chinese women tell me that grown people never have it, because all who are susceptible to it have it when young. Just refer to me that person who wants to know if you are doing anything for missions; I can tell him how you and the Av. S. are helping and cheering this little missionary. Oh, what a joy and privilege to be an ambassador of the King! Halleluiah! I am rejoicing." (Those who intend sending a present for Drusie's tree had better be making preparations. I'd like to know whether I'd better get a big tree, or whether a little one will hold all the gifts. Charlie's social has amounted to $166.95.)

—There is no more useful or dignified vocation than placing the best Christian papers and Bible school literature in homes and churches. For men and women of the "this one thing I do" spirit we have constant and remunerative employ. Write.

—Ivan Agee, the enterprising Atlanta (Ill.) pastor, maintains that an interested, growing Bible school is a positive assurance of a growing, prosperous church. His is a splendid, advancing school. Of course his superintendent, Brother Mountjoy, uses the Dowling Bible school literature.

—We asked W. P. Keeler, of Chicago, whether the stereoscope and fifty scenic cards we give as a premium for two new subscribers and the $3 was good as represented. He replies it is better and that it is marvelous we can send out such a valuable premium for services so small.

—The circulation manager's report to our directorate for November showed 2,632 new names added to our lists, and a net gain of 2,462. For these evidences of divine approval of this journal we thank Him and pledge ourselves anew to do our utmost to serve the King and all his people.

—Our great literary Pillars of Hercules are "The Garrison Library" and "The Campbell Library." These will always stand as the pre-eminent, monumental, first century literature of the Disciples. In their entirety they should be in each Disciple home. We will send them in time for Christmas, the first for $5, the latter for $8, both and the 1907 CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for $13.

—The following appreciation from "The Advance" of Chicago relates to one of the best books ever sent from our presses:

> "Helps to Faith," by J. H. Garrison. The author is Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, a newspaper of the "Christian" denomination. His method is to present evidences for Christianity starting from the common ground of admitted facts, and to meet objections by the same process. The book is winning, persuasive, and likely to be truly helpful to the mind disturbed by popular doubts. (St. Louis; Christian Publishing Co., $1.)

—You are ignoring an almost certain guarantee of success if you fail to use 300, 500, or 1000 CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS per week during your revival services. With these evangels in hundreds of homes silently yet continuously and effectively pleading for the higher life, Christian union and an immediate alliance with God your meeting house will be filled with earnest and prepared listeners from the start. We also send pink circulars with the papers containing pictures of pastors and evangelists and local announcements.

—"I am anxious to say what I feel about your new hymn book 'Gloria in Excelsis.' You have labored earnestly and the result is the best song book in the brotherhood. The responsive readings are well selected and classified; the order of services will do much to enrich the worship of the church; the splendid selection of hymns and appropriate music can not be excelled. You are to be congratulated on having produced such a book; and our brotherhood is to be congratulated on having such a superb addition to its song library.—Geo. W. Henry, Tipton, Ind.

—Week after week we are pleased to enumerate churches testifying to the world through the exhibition of clubs of CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST readers that they have their faces toward the sunrise, that they are progressive, aggressive, and profoundly in earnest in their attempts to disseminate primitive Christianity throughout the earth, multiply apostolic churches and edify individual Disciples. Here are last week's clubs:

California, Pa., Thos. Martin, pastor	3
Homestead, Pa., E. L. Allen	3
Chicago, Ill.	4
Woodland, W. Va.	4
Shelbyville, Ind., H. O. Pritchard, pastor	6
Grand Rapids, Mich., F. P. Arthur	7
Waynesville, Ill., E. E. Nichols, pastor	10
Kansas City, Geo. H. Combs, pastor	13
Indianapolis, C. B. Newnan, pastor	39

—This company has suffered a severe loss through the withdrawal of Bro. B. M. Stoddard from our corps of propagandists. His thorough preparation for his ministry, the conscientiousness with which he fulfilled every obligation, his popularity with our preachers wherever he went, and his Christian enthusiasm made him an invaluable assistant. We are not surprised at his call to become General Superintendent of the Great Western Printing and Publishing Co. Success to him. We trust others will school themselves in this work as for the dignified and useful profession it is.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
  Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
  The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
  For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
  Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
  And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

LOOKING TOWARD PITTSBURG.

—"Blest be the tie that binds" England and America into a closer fellowship than is known to diplomacy—our common Christianity. Nor are there anywhere found more beautiful sentiments than those cherished for one another by the Disciples of Christ trying to exemplify the graces of primitive Christianity on either continent. We all deeply sympathize with our English brethren in the difficulties of establishing our "nonconformist" cause in that land of ancient precedents and prejudices against innovations in things religious, and we rejoice in their triumphs. We welcome them into our Centennial Propaganda and hope multitudes of them will help in our Pittsburg celebration.

The American people cheerfully pay millions per annum for the care of the old veterans who in earlier years offered their lives as a defense to our government and the perpetuation of its hard-won liberties. If the amount of their pensions were left to popular vote, under stirring appeals to gratitude and patriotism, the people would doubtless enthusiastically ratify a resolution to treble the amounts being placed in the trembling hands of the old heroes and their wives. Our Centennial secretary eloquently portrays this week another band of soldiers, heroes everyone, who are walking in the shadows of the years with faith and zeal undimmed but with natural strength abated by the resistless processes of time. Our commerce with them is not of statutes but of grace. The law of the land prescribes what the U. S. treasurer must give those who once followed the stars and stripes. A higher law impels us to give even more generously to our brethren who have helped us into our rich spiritual heritage through their loyalty to the white banners of Prince Immanuel. A quarter million endowment for ministerial relief should be one of our Centennial victories to celebrate in 1909.

Christmas and Centennial hardly constitute an alliteration, but there should be a closer than a merely euphoneous connection between the two suggestive terms.

The Union Avenue Church of this city is earnestly engaged in building a church home. At a recent business meeting the old problem of securing funds was under consideration. One of the elders, J. H. Garrison—known at least by reputation to some of the brethren—remarked that a characteristic of all great achievements among us was a heroic initiative by some one man. When the most beautiful South Broadway Church was devised for Denver one man dedicated his fortune to it and afterward lived in the church and served as its janitor. George H. Combs' splendid edifice on Independence boulevard, Kansas City, was made possible by an R. A. Long's $75,000; and so he plead for some one whom God had endowed with the power to perform a great and distinguishing sacrifice for the cause of the Disciples of Christ in this city.

His address to that local assembly ought to be sounded throughout the land this Christmastide. Will not some man this Christmas place $100,000 upon the altar for the endowment of a great missionary, benevolent or educational enterprise? Will not others make wholehearted dedication of lives and all their talents to the glory of Immanuel? Let heroes of initiative stand forth in this Christmas light and inspire us all to nobler ideals and loftier achievements as part of the record of our first century as a peculiar people.

The Old Preacher's Christmas.

BY SEC. W. R. WARREN.

In the Kingdom of God no man liveth to himself. And not one of us is able to make provision for his own Christmas and that of his immediate family without considering a wider circle of persons in whose happiness he must be interested. Each of our lives has been touched and profoundly influenced by more than one minister of the gospel. The treasures which some of these have brought into our lives cannot be estimated in dollars and cents, and yet they have been allowed to pass beyond the limits of our knowledge, and to-day we are unable to tell where or how most of them are living, or whether they have passed on to the reward of the just.

In the nature of things one of them somewhere is old and poor and helpless. During the years of his successful and popular labor his needs were provided for with reasonable regularity by the people to whom he ministered in spiritual things. Christmas every year he and his devoted wife were remembered with many little luxuries and tokens of affection and appreciation. During the last few years he has passed in rapid succession from one church to another, each a little smaller and a little poorer than the one before until none was found willing to provide even a scant living for the service that he rendered. To-day there is no congregation that looks to him as its spiritual minister. Each of those that he has served has another man in his place, who receives not only the regular support of the congregation, but all the special gifts and donations that its members bestow.

You would expect these two aged saints to complain bitterly of the ingratitude of Christ's disciples and churches. Instead, to your surprise you find them heroically cheerful. They look back to the cross to which our Savior was nailed by his own people, and they look forward to the glorious heaven into which he is waiting to receive them. They have learned, in whatsoever state they are therewith to be content. The burden of their prayer is that the kingdom for which they can no longer labor should be more gloriously advanced. Daily thanksgiving rises from their hearts as they hear the news of gospel victories! They are satisfied with their lot and its privations.

But can we be satisfied to leave them so? Are they not in the most intimate sense of "our own"? Failing to care for them would brand us worse than infidels. Can we plead with men to become Christians and ourselves remain so unchristian? Can we urge our religious neighbors to be Christians only when they so far surpass us in this fundamental Christian grace? Let us make consistency one of the Centennial virtues as we approach 1909?

England's Centennial Plans.

SECRETARY L. W. MORGAN.

The twenty-sixth annual conference of our churches in Britain recently closed at Tasso Tabernacle, Fulham, London. The President for the year, Mark Wayne Williams, West London Tabernacle, presided and on the opening evening gave an excellent address on "The Church of Christ." W. Durban was elected president for the coming year, for the tenth time, after an absence from the chair for five years. Great regret was expressed at his enforced absence from the conference through illness. E. H. Spring, of Gloucester, was also absent, through illness in his family.

The reports from our seventeen churches and missions were very satisfactory. More money has been raised than in any previous year in the history of our work in England. The Liverpool church freed itself of a mortgage of nearly $5,000 and other churches also did well in paying off mortgage debts or in raising money for their building funds. The churches are in earnest concerning these two things. In this connection the completion of the organization of a building loan society is significant. The society will do its work very much on the lines of the Church Extension Society in America, and has not been born too soon. F. Coop, of Southport, was elected president, with the support of a strong board of management.

Our new mission was started during the year and another just after the conference year closed. At least two others will be opened in a few weeks time. If all of these develop into churches it will mean more accomplished in this line than during several years past.

Plans are being considered for celebrating the Centennial in 1909 and a three years' campaign is to be entered upon. The proposals of the executive committee include the doubling of our self-supporting churches, the paying of half the mortgages on our churches, the opening of at least eight new missions, the raising of $2,000 per annum for home missions, the erection of at least three "Centenary" church buildings, and the raising of a special fund of $25,000 in commemoration of the departure of Thomas and Alexander Campbell for America, to be administered by the Building Loan Society. Concerning the last item more will be written later as it is desired to enlist the sympathy and help of our American brethren. It is proposed also to organize a great convention to meet in London to follow immediately upon the Pittsburg convention.

Current Events

France and the Church.

The quarrel between the French government and the Catholic church reached its most acute stage on December 12, the date set for putting into effect the law passed a year ago separating church and state. The law renders it necessary for every church to secure a government license in order to conduct service. As a concession, it has been decided that churches may secure permits under the general law of 1881 for the licensing of public meetings. But the church does not admit that its services, its masses and high masses, can properly be brought under the law of public meetings. It is only another and more acute phase of the demand of two years ago requiring religious associations to be registered in accordance with law. Registration in one case or the securing of a license in the other involves no special hardship. It is the theory of the thing that is objected to. If the government can impose any sort of regulation upon the church it can, if it pleases, impose regulations which would be fatal to the church's freedom and effectiveness. The place to make the fight, the church argues, is at the point where the principle only is involved, without waiting for specific acts of oppression. The Pope's late encyclical makes it evident that the church will not yield. The government shows no sign of receding from its position. The church hopes to provoke the state to violence and thus to cause an uprising of popular sympathy in favor of the church. Meanwhile the priests are waiting, half in hope, half in fear, to see whether they will be put out of their churches by violence.

The President and the Senate.

It is rumored again that there is prospect of a break between the president and the senate. The senate's delay in confirming the appointments of Moody, Bonaparte and Cortelyou to their new cabinet positions gives a color of probability to the rumor. The senate's charge is that the president has "ignored" senatorial customs and precedents in the executive management of public affairs." So he has. He has demoralized the system of senatorial patronage, has robbed senators of their immemorial right to pay their private political debts with appointments to public office, and has set the senate to work on the very first day of the session. We all know (Kipling told us) what happened to the "fool who tried to hustle the east"—meaning the far east. The east is celerity itself compared with that highly deliberative body which we call the senate, and when a president tries to hustle the senate he is tolerably certain to make himself unpopular with the senate, however much his actions may be approved by the public. It is customary for the senate to confirm cabinet appointments as soon as they are received. The delay this time is said to be partly as a means of conveying to the president a delicate hint that he has been too swift. Then there is some ostensible opposition to the appointees themselves. The objection to Mr. Cortelyou is that, as chairman of the Republican national committee, he received campaign funds from insurance companies. Mr. Garfield, the appointee as secretary of the interior, has the misfortune to be persona non grata to Senator Foraker. Mr. Moody is charged, by the Democrats, with having favored the reduction of representation in the southern states which have disfranchised the negroes—a measure which most of us think it would be unwise to push, but which nearly every one admits to be exactly in keeping with the provision of the constitution. Mr. Bonaparte—O, crowning joke—is opposed because of his alleged pro-trust sympathies. Fancy the senate holding up a Roosevelt appointment because the appointee is suspected of sympathy with the trusts. Well, the senate's delay is probably only a sort of naval demonstration in the enemy's waters. The appointments will doubtless go through in good time.

The Nobel Prize.

The Nobel prize, of $40,000, for the promotion of peace, has been awarded by the Norwegian parliament to President Roosevelt. Dr. Nobel, a wealthy Swedish scientist who died a few years ago, left the bulk of his fortune to establish five prizes to be given annually to the persons who have made the most valuable contributions to the sciences of physics, chemistry and medicine, to pure idealistic literature and to the cause of international peace and arbitration. The award to the president is made on the ground of his services in bringing the Russo-Japanese war to an end. The president, in acknowledging the award of the prize, announces that he has decided to use the money in establishing at Washington a permanent industrial peace commission to be an agency for the promotion of arbitration between capital and labor.

The Storer Case.

The altercation which has arisen between the president and Mr. Bellamy Storer, late minister to Vienna, is unfortunate. It suggests to the plain citizen, who has not time to make exhaustive research into the merits of a purely personal question, that first Mr. Storer and then the president have put some things in print which it would have been just as well to leave in manuscript—and then destroy the manuscript. Mr. Storer, who is a convert to Catholicism, and has all the zeal of a proselyte, was summarily dismissed from the diplomatic service because he persisted in making official efforts to have the Pope make Archbishop Ireland a cardinal and in representing to the Pope that these efforts were in obedience to the president's orders. The president denies that he ever gave such orders, admits that personally he would like to see his friend Ireland a cardinal, and asserts that he has repeatedly told Storer that this personal desire (which happens to be also a desire of Storer's) must in no case be made the subject of diplomatic representations to the Pope. We suppose it would have been no offense if Storer had subtly and warily imparted to his holiness the information that, while the president had nothing to do with the matter, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, of Oyster Bay, would be gratified by the elevation of Ireland to the cardinalate. But Mr. Storer lacked the subtlety requisite for this nice discrimination. His touch was too heavy for a delicate passage, and his zeal was too great to permit him to stop when he was told to stop. Mr. Storer published his side of the case after his removal. This moved the president (rather unnecessarily, we think) to publish his side. To this, Mr. Storer replies with more publications. It happens that Mr. Storer is blessed with a wife who takes a keen interest in her husband's affairs. Her efforts in behalf of Archbishop Ireland were even more strenuous than his and almost as official. She got herself the name "the American Ambassadress at Rome." The president's last protest was directed to her. One long letter which Mr. Storer publishes was written three years ago by the president to Mrs. Storer. It seems to have no special bearing on the case further than to show that he addressed her as "My Dear Maria," referred to Storer affectionately by his given name, and replied kindly but evasively to her urgent request that her husband be given a cabinet position.

The Negro Troops.

Secretary Taft's report devotes considerable space to a full review of the case of the negro troops which were dismissed from the service on account of the riot of August 13 at Brownsville, Texas. It is, as it seems to us, a full and complete defense of the action taken in their discharge. A considerable number of men in the battalion engaged in a murderous riot against citizens of the town and got back to the barracks without their identity being discovered by any one outside of the battalion. Under the circumstances few members of the battalion could have failed to know at least some of the criminals. Officers and men united in a conspiracy of silence to prevent the punishment of the guilty, on the theory, doubtless, that it is dishonorable to betray one's comrade. (It ought to be remarked, by the way, that his obligation of honor not to betray a comrade is correlative to the obligation of the comrade not to do a dishonorable deed which ought to be revealed. If the latter is disregarded the former ceases.) The dismissal of the troops was not a punishment of innocent and guilty together. As a punishment it would be unjust to the innocent and inadequate for the guilty. It was simply a measure of safety. Such a battalion is a menace and not a protection to the public peace. It is the right and duty of the department to get rid of such a body of soldiers.

Christmas in the Air.

Five more days and then Christmas! The happy season is again with us. Its spirit for weeks has been in the air. Its benign influence has been softening men's hearts. The best thing Christmas does is to quicken the generous impulse of natures chilled by selfishness. The peace and good will it brings make the hardest and most tight-fisted Scrooges of society to be touched by the tenderness and beneficence that show their influence in the stores and markets, on the street cars and trains, in the nursery and kitchen—everywhere. The great lesson: "It is more blessed to give than to receive," taught by him who, ascending on high, "led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men," pervades the whole atmosphere.

The first characteristic of the Christmas spirit is that of giving. Tokens of affection and esteem are stored up sometimes months ahead, or purchased at the time without reference to cost. Remembrances trifling in value, it may be, are gathered together and sent out on the festal morning to show our friends we love them and think of them. Boyhood chums, old people, servants, children, neighbors, people with whom life has been a struggle, the sick, the troubled—all come to mind under the impulse of the Christmas spirit. It is a time of thankfulness, and gratitude to God prompts to good deeds to men.

"Now that the time is come wherein
Our Savior Christ was born,
The larders full of beef and pork,
The garners filled with corn;
As God hath plenty to thee sent,
Take comfort of thy labors,
And let it never thee repent
To feast thy needy neighbors."

The second characteristic of the Christmas spirit is that of child-likeness. We are all brought into closer touch with the children. The oldest bends lowest to the little child. The coldest is warmed by memories of far-away childhood. Every home blessed with children is a house of mysteries. Parents are consulting in whispers. Mysterious packages are being smuggled in, and hidden away on shelves and in closets. Stockings are being darned. Confiding letters are being written and addressed: "S. Claus, Esq., North Pole." Childish eyes stare and childish minds are filled with wonder and childish hearts beat with quickened expectations. It is the children's festival and the poor man's festival—everybody's festival.

"Take courage soul, in grief cast down,
Forget the bitter dealing;
A Child is born in David's town,
To touch all souls with healing.
Then let us go and seek the Child,
Children like him, meek, undefiled."

The third characteristic of the Christmas spirit is its tone of cheer and hope. It could not be the spirit of benevolence, or of childhood, or of Christ without this. It tells of glad tidings of great joy. It recalls the gospel—the only thing known distinctively as "gospel" that ever broke in upon the darkness of this world. It fills the whole earth wherever it has gone with the angel chorus. It promises the fulness of joy eternal. Were this spirit always in the air; were this loving kindness ever leavening human society everywhere, this earth would be heaven. As it is, it inspires men on every return of its benediction with hope for themselves and hope for the race.

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll;
Leave thy low-vaulted past;
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast
Till thou at length be free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea."

When Christ Was Born.

When the world was dark with the night of sin and no star of hope shone above the horizon of time, save the promise of the coming Deliverer, there was born in Bethlehem of Judea, a child whose birth was also the birth of a new era in the world's history. That was a cold, cruel, despairing world, upon which the star of Bethlehem rose. Human wisdom, philosophy, learning, art in its highest form, law, government—all these had sought to arrest the world's moral degeneracy, and stem the tide of human corruption, but in vain. Hebrew, Greek and Roman, had struggled with the problem of human deliverance without success. The world was sinking under the weight of its woe and its guilt.

There was no such thing in the world as a free government by a free people when Christ was born. There was no recognition of equality of rights and of the sacredness of human life, as we now view it, when Jesus came into the world. Childhood was neglected, womanhood unhonored, marriage a name, and the home, as we know it, unknown throughout the Roman world. Pagan religions without love, worshiping gods without pity and without righteousness, brought no relief to a sin-sick world. It was a world without churches, without Christian homes, without hospitals and asylums for the unfortunate, without the softening and purifying influence of that religion which dominates our civilization.

In an age like that Jesus was born. His coming was the birthday of a new age. The song of the angel-choir which echoed over the Judean hills, was the prelude to the great anthem of human redemption. The birth of Jesus was the coming of God into the life of man. It was the union of humanity and divinity. It was the entering into the stream of human history of a divine element destined to change its whole current and to make it ultimately the very river of God.

To compare the world of to-day with that into which Jesus was born, is to get some measure of his greatness and of his influence on humanity. His hand, pierced for human sin, has not only lifted ancient empires off their hinges, but it has opened the gate of life and progress to all mankind. It has planted the flower of hope in the heart of despair. His love has evoked from human hearts sweeter music and nobler songs than the world had ever known. His triumph over death has lifted the leaden weight of sorrow from the heart of humanity, and opened up a vista of endless life. His character has revolutionized the ideals of the world, and is leading humanity upward to nobler heights. His influence is girdling the globe. His name is honored and adored, and his praises are sung among nearly all the tribes and peoples of earth.

Jesus' birth opened a fountain of life in the world's desert of sin and death. Wherever that fountain sends its healing streams the beautiful and fragrant flowers of Christian virtue grow and flourish. Wherever these streams have not flown because the channels have been choked by the indolence and unbelief of the church, there sterility and death still abound. This fountain of life is also a fountain of hope whose joyous notes are the marching-song of the world's progress.

We best honor the day and season associated with his birth by imbibing his spirit of love toward all, and emulating his example of doing good to all, and especially to those most in need, as we have opportunity. May the spirit expressed in the refrain of that angelic song which announced his birth soon pervade the entire world: "Peace on earth, good will among men!"

Some Vexed Questions.

Paul must have been tried with troublesome questions in his day, judging from his advice to Timothy to "shun foolish and ignorant questions." No doubt we have plenty of them in our day. Some of these hard questions, however, naturally grow out of the anomalous condition of a divided church, and in answering them one must be guided by the general principles of the gospel, as there are of course no specific New Testament answers to such questions. Here are a few that frequently come to our desk:

"If God knows all things, why should we pray?" This, of course, is based on a misconception of what prayer is. It is not a means of communicating information to God, though some prayers might lead one to think so.

2. "Why didn't God make man so he couldn't sin?" Because he did not want to make a machine, but a free, rational, moral and responsible being.

3. "What would become of a man who should suddenly die on his way to be baptized?"

This "poser" used to be put to Disciples of Christ by their denominational critics, who supposed our position involved the damnation of all who were not baptized, regardless of conditions or circumstances!

They forgot that other New Testament principle—"It is required of a man according to what he hath, and not according to what he hath not"—which we also believe.

4. "Is a man a Christian who has not been baptized (immersed), although he be a sincere believer who has obeyed Christ to the best of his knowledge?"

The principle mentioned in the foregoing would seem to answer this question. Alexander Campbell's definition of a Christian, as one who believes in Christ with his whole heart and obeys him to the full measure of his knowledge of his will, is one that is not likely to be disproved or greatly improved. He is a Christian who has been Christed—anointed by Christ's Spirit.

5. "But is such a one as described above 'in Christ?' Paul says we are 'baptized into Christ,' but if only immersion is baptism, how can those who have not been immersed be in Christ?"

Surely a Christian is 'in Christ,' and unless one is prepared to deny that only immersed believers can be Christians, he must admit that all sincere believers in Christ who obey him according to their understanding of his will, are 'in Christ,' by virtue of such faith and obedience. To deny this is formalism, pure and simple.

6. "Why not then receive into our churches those who have been conscientiously sprinkled or poured, for baptism, and who believe these are Scriptural 'modes' of baptism?"

Because we can not make the conscience of others a guide for ourselves, nor a substitute for what we believe to be the New Testament conditions of church membership. The local church, acting collectively, must be true to its understanding of Christ's will for the local church, just as each individual must be true to his understanding of Christ's will for the individual. As the individual believer must be true to his understanding of Christ's will in order to be saved, so must the local congregation, which has a collective life to maintain and develop, conform to its knowledge of Christ's will, in order to be saved from disintegration and sterility.

7. "Is the local congregation, then, the highest court of appeal in settling such questions?"

The will of Christ, as contained in the New Testament, is of course the ultimate authority in all matters relating to his religion. The local congregation is composed of those who have reached a common mind, or unity of faith and knowledge concerning the vital things of the Kingdom of God and the constitutional features of the church which Christ established. This makes it possible and profitable for them to associate themselves together for worship and for Christian service in extending Christ's reign. All congregations, however, similarly constituted, having a common faith and a common understanding of Christ's will as regards the terms of membership in his church, are bound together by the ties of a common faith and a common work, and constitute a larger brotherhood, whose consensus of judgment on any question of practice or policy becomes a regulative force and a safeguard against extreme tendencies. It cannot be doubted that it is Christ's will that his local churches should co-operate in mutual fellowship and service.

But such a mutuality in fellowship and service, implies, not necessarily unity of opinion on all questions or in all methods of service, but it does imply loyalty to a common faith, and conformity to the general consensus of judgment in the body as to the constitutional features of the church. It would be a grave mistake for any local church, sharing in the general life and activities of the brotherhood, and being nurtured and strengthened by this wider fellowship and broader activity, to forfeit these benefits by adopting any policy which cuts it off from such benefit. This has been the serious mistake of the churches known as anti-missionary society churches. It may become the mistake of churches at the other extreme, who, guided by some question of local expediency, or following an opinion as to conditions of membership not shared by the brotherhood at large, may alienate itself from the larger life and wider fellowship of the body as a whole. Of course if a local congregation should so change its conscientious convictions of truth, as to make this conformity to the consensus of judgment in the brotherhood as to what is essential to the integrity and unity of the church an impossibility without being disloyal to its understanding of Christ's will, that is another matter. The time has then arrived for a readjustment of relationships.

"No man liveth unto himself and no man dieth unto himself." So no local church lives or dies to itself. It is an integral part of a common body whose growth and influence are affected by the fate of each particular part.

Notes and Comments.

Rev. Samuel L. Boston, of Pittsburg, Pa., who is writing a series of articles on "Baptism; Its Significance and Mode," for the "Presbyterian Banner," says, among other things: "Immersion is out of harmony with the whole genius and simplicity of the gospel plan of salvation." A little further on he says: "Will Presbyterians immerse? Yes, there is no reason why they cannot." That is, there is no reason why they cannot adopt a practice which is "out of harmony with the whole genius and simplicity of the gospel plan of salvation!" Whether sincere and honest believers can ever agree upon what Christ meant when he commanded baptism, or not, they ought to be able to agree, at least, upon so plain and self-evident a proposition as this: That any form of baptism that is scriptural enough to be practiced, ought not to be preached and written against and denounced by those who practice it. If our Pedo-baptist brethren are going to continue to practice immersion—and they will be compelled to continue it—they ought to cease their opposition to it for consistency's sake and for truth's sake. We are sure that a large number of intelligent and fair-minded Pedo-baptists will concur in this view of the matter.

Rev. William Frost Bishop, pastor of Clifton Heights Presbyterian church, replying to a sermon by Archbishop Glennon, whose sermon on "The Origin of Creeds and Dogmas" was printed in the Republic, sends to that paper the following apt and sufficient refutation of the Archbishop's contention:

> "One reads with amazement your report of Archbishop Glennon's sermon at Richmond, Va., on a recent occasion. It makes him say that Christ founded the Roman Catholic Church, and that all other churches were founded by mere men. You make his contention to be that in the same sense in which Catholics claim Christ as the founder of their church in that same sense Alexander Campbell was the founder of the 'Christian' Church, Wesley the founder of the Methodist Church, Luther the founder of the Lutheran Church, Calvin the founder of the Presbyterian Church, and so on.
> "Alexander Campbell founded no church. He merely undertook to reform a church which already claimed Christ as its divine founder.
> "Luther founded no church. He reformed a church which for centuries had claimed Christ as its only foundation.
> "Wesley was merely a reformer, and a former and a re-former are celestial diameters apart. The vast movement of the sixteenth century was not a 'formation,' but a 'reformation.' John Calvin did not found a church in the same sense in which Catholics claim that Christ founded the Roman Church."

The attempt of the Roman Catholic Archbishop to make it appear that Christ founded the Roman Catholic Church, and that the great reformers mentioned established other churches, is absurd in the light of history. Every one acquainted with the history of the church knows that these reform movements mentioned were efforts to recover the church from the apostasy of Roman Catholicism. Not one of these reformers attempted to establish a church of his own, but to restore to the church of Jesus Christ those principles and practices which had been lost in the great apostasy.

Kentucky is often made the butt of jokes referring to the fondness of its citizens for old bourbon, mint juleps, etc. It may be surprising, therefore, to our readers to know that of the 119 counties in the state, 94 are now totally "dry," to use a current phrase to express the illegality of saloons. Twelve of these counties voted against the saloon within the last two months. A special dispatch of the 16th inst, from Louisville, Ky., commenting upon this situation says:

> "This remarkable spread of temperance in the Bourbon commonwealth, the home and stronghold of Kentucky whisky, has been more strikingly shown in the last ten days than ever before. Not one county in Kentucky is entirely 'wet.' There are only four counties that are approximately saturated. These are all along the Ohio river in the northern part of the state. There are ninety-four counties without any saloons, eighteen with saloons in only one place, eight with saloons in two places and six where liquor is sold in three or more places."

Our hearty congratulations to the people of Kentucky for this remarkable growth of temperance sentiment. How has this good work been accomplished? Such reforms do not come about by accident. Is the Anti-Saloon League behind this local option movement, together with the prohibition agitation? What has been the relation of the churches to this movement?

Editor's Easy Chair.

Once in each year the little hill-town of Bethlehem outshines all the capitals of the world. London, Paris, St. Petersburg, Berlin, Vienna, Tokio, Pekin, Washington—all are eclipsed by the ancient town near which Ruth gleaned barley in the fields, where David spent his boyhood days tending his father's flocks, and where later, in the fullness of time, the Christ-child was born. Other cities may crumble into ruins and their very names and places be forgotten. Macaulay's New Zealander may stand upon a broken arch of London Bridge and sketch the ruins of St. Paul. But as long as the race endures men will make pilgrimages to Bethlehem of Judea and stand in awe at the spot where the Savior of mankind was born. At this season of the year the whole world, in imagination, not only makes its pilgrimage to that far-famed city of David, but it traverses nineteen centuries of time to get back to that auspicious and historic night when Jesus was born. What marvelous power there must be in a personality which can thus draw all the ages to itself, and render forever sacred the place of its advent into the world! No wonder the world sings with Phillips Brooks:

"O little town of Bethlehem,
How still we see thee lie;
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep
The silent stars go by:
Yet in thy dark streets shineth
The everlasting light;
The hopes and fears of all the years
Are met in thee to-night."

Brooding over these holy memories, and remembering the mission which brought Christ into the world, who of us can not breathe the prayer:

"O holy child of Bethlehem,
Descend to us, we pray;
Cast out our sin, and enter in,
Be born in us to-day.
We hear the Christmas angels
The great glad tidings tell;
O come to us, abide with us,
Our Lord, Immanuel!"

Of all the anniversaries of the year—the great days that stand out like mountain peaks across the plains of Time—there is none that stirs the imagination and quickens the memory, and warms the heart like Christmas. It is the magician whose mysterious wand wakens all the holier impulses of the heart, sends the memory back along the shining track of the years to childhood days, and fills all the earth and the heavens once more with the awe and mystery of life's early morning. It summons before us once more the faces and forms of the loved and the lost of long ago. We see once more in the light of the glowing fire the radiant faces of a family circle long since broken up, to be gathered no more on earth. We hear again the merry shouts and laughter of the light-hearted and hope-filled boys and girls whose heads are now silvered with age. We live over again in imagination, those bright, halcyon days, and find ourselves half regretting that we can not live them over in reality. While this can not be, we may retain the faith of childhood, youthfulness and buoyancy of spirit, and keep in touch and sympathy with childhood and youth and with all that goes to make life beautiful and the future bright and hopeful. In so far as Christmas helps us to do this it is a blessing to age and a benediction to childhood. There is eternal youth in the heart of one who has learned the true meaning of Christmas and has entered into the secret of that marvelous Life which, manifesting itself in the flesh, on that first Christmas morning, has filled all subsequent ages with its influence and is destined yet to fill the whole world with its glory.

What is the greatest thing about Christmas? What is it that gives it its dominant spirit and makes it a glad, joyous season? When we stop to think of it, it is love, which has been truly called "the greatest thing in the world." Why should this spirit of love and good will among men find expression in a special manner at Christmastide? Because love became incarnate in the birth of Jesus. God is love, but the world would never have known that if love had not become flesh and dwelt among us. St. John was no doubt thinking of Jesus, and of the Father whom he had revealed, when he uttered that great truth, "God is love." Love as a law of life was a new principle which Christ brought into the world. The birth of Christ marks the beginning of a new era, because it marks the introduction of love as a substitute for all those evil passions which had hitherto so largely controlled the actions of men. How slowly, after all, does love win its way as a controlling factor in life against the opposing forces of hatred, envy, malice, selfishness, revenge, avarice, lust and worldly ambition! And yet not more surely does the sun advance along his conquering way, from the winter solstice to the height of summer, than does love advance as a dominating factor in the life of the world, influencing laws, customs, and governmental policies, and asserting its regnancy in all the relationships among men. Yes, it is love that creates the atmosphere of Christmas, which we all like to breathe. What a blessed world this will be to live in, when all the days of all the months, in all the years, shall be dominated by love, in all the spheres of human activity, and in all the manifold relationships of life!

If Christmas shall remind us that love must become incarnate to accomplish its beneficent purposes, it will serve a most useful end. We are too apt to allow our kindly feeling toward all, at the Christmas time, to fritter itself away in mere good wishes. Put it into deeds. Clothe it with flesh and blood, and send it about on errands of mercy. What love needs to bless the world is continuous incarnation in human form. It wants human hands and feet with which to minister to those in need. It needs human speech to utter the word of sympathy and good cheer. It needs embodiment in all those who claim to be Christ's followers in order that he may continue going about doing good. This is the great lesson of Christmas. It was not enough that God should love the world from afar. That love must take a human body and tabernacle with men to accomplish its purposes. Our love for our fellowmen, and our love for God must also be embodied. This is the deepest meaning of Christmas. Christ's Church, which is called his body, was intended to be a re-incarnation of Christ. Through it Christ would still minister to the world's needs. This is the great demonstration for which the world is waiting. When Christ's love for humanity finds itself incarnate in the lives of his professed followers, then every day will become a Christmas in which Christ will be born anew in human hearts, and all the hills and valleys of earth will echo with angelic songs of "peace on earth, good will among men."

It remains for the Easy Chair to wish all its readers "a Merry Christmas," and even more than that, a happy Christmas. Nothing more delights us than the real joy and happiness of our readers. No motive for living is stronger than the desire to minister to their well-being and happiness. The Easy Chair craves a place, in memory at least, at your festal boards and around your radiant hearth-stones when the yule log burns brightly in the fireplace. It wishes to share in all your domestic joys and, as far as possible, mitigate or help you to bear, your burdens and sorrows. But in this happy Christmas season we trust that joy will be the dominant note in all the homes which THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has the privilege of entering. If anything found in these pages shall serve to make Christmas a gladder and happier season for you, we shall be glad in your gladness. In the preceding paragraphs we have indicated how we may make the most of Christmas, and get the most joy out of it. It is by putting our love and good will for others into deeds of practical kindness. One way of doing this, is, if you have found THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a source of strength and comfort to you by its weekly visits through the year, to send it as a Christmas present to some one whom you love, that it may be a weekly messenger of light and love to your friend or loved one through all the coming year. In what other way can you, with so small an outlay, confer so great a blessing upon any one for whom you cherish a kindly personal feeling? In any event, the Easy Chair wishes its readers, one and all, a very happy Christmas!

The Christmas Heart

By Frank Waller Allen

"For unto us a child is born, Unto us a son is given."

The worthiness of a religion is to be measured, not by the mere logic of its creed or the beauty of its theology, but by the result of the practice of its teachings upon human character. That doctrine which does not sink from the mind down into the heart, and thence out to serving and teaching through kindly lips and ministering fingers is of no value whatever to a world of ignorant and suffering men and women crying for life. And of necessity the indisputably best religion is that which, when lived, makes for the most good for the most of men.

History has never chronicled the life of a more active man than that of Jesus of Nazareth. There has never been a life more vital, more positive, busier with doing the work within his hands than was that of the Master during his public career. And he never preached, told men of a principle, or instructed them in a truth, but his message was potent with the command to do things. To work, to serve, to teach, to love, and thus to taste the joys of immortality.

Yet with all of this force in the personality of Christ, and the very practicalness, and every-day-service found in his teaching, there was much in him, too, which appealed directly to the poetic instinct of the heart. There was much tender sentiment within the man, and there was a deal of that sense of the eternal fitness of things, which makes men companionable. In a word: Jesus was not only the Man of Sorrows, and a man of action; but he was as equally the Man of Joys, and, perhaps most of all, a Man of Heart. Therefore, because too much business, too much mind and over much logic is not good for the soul, it behooves us betimes to sit down face to face with our hearts, for there is much strength to be gotten out of God's Dream-World. And of all seasons where logic is out of place it is at Christmastide. Then, at least, for once in the whole year's round, let doctrine, chapter and verse be banished for a good, impulsive, right warm Christmas Heart.

The greatest blessing God ever gave the world was the first Christmas Gift. "Unto us a son is given." And therefore are we impressed with the truth of it being far, far better to give than to receive. Still more wonderfully strange is it, that the only way we may have and keep within our lives this Gift of God is by giving the gift away. The only Christmas Heart you may call your own is the Christmas Heart you give to the men and the women of the world . . . . Of the good within him man cannot give either to his God or his fellows other than that which has already been given of the Father-friend. . . . As a man treats men so does he behave toward his God. . . . . Therefore the greatest gift for you, for me, to give to God is to give to men the Christmas Heart—the Christ Heart. And the only way to have Christ in the heart is to give him to those who are in need. Likewise the Father has made it beautifully strange that the more of the Christ-principle we give away the more have we yet within the treasure of our own heart.

A pure heart inactive is not a Christmas Heart, but purity at work to leaven the life about it by the service of mere contrast is indeed giving the gift of the Christ. Likewise to give to our friendships sincerity; to make forgiveness an active principle inasmuch as we give those who have wronged us an opportunity to forget; to remember that the giving of strength is the gentlest of all service; to keep in mind that to give cheerful hands to the sorrowful is of as much importance as to give blessing-prayers; and more than all else to understand that not love, but love at work, given even as the Father gave in the long ago, is the greatest and best thing in the world; in a word: to love as Jesus loved, this is to have within the Christmas Heart.

These things form the characteristics which were of the heart of Christ. To know them is a splendid thing; to have them a part of your own heart is to have within you so much of divinity.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them"

By Thomas J. Clark

(Isa. 11:6; 9:6,7.)

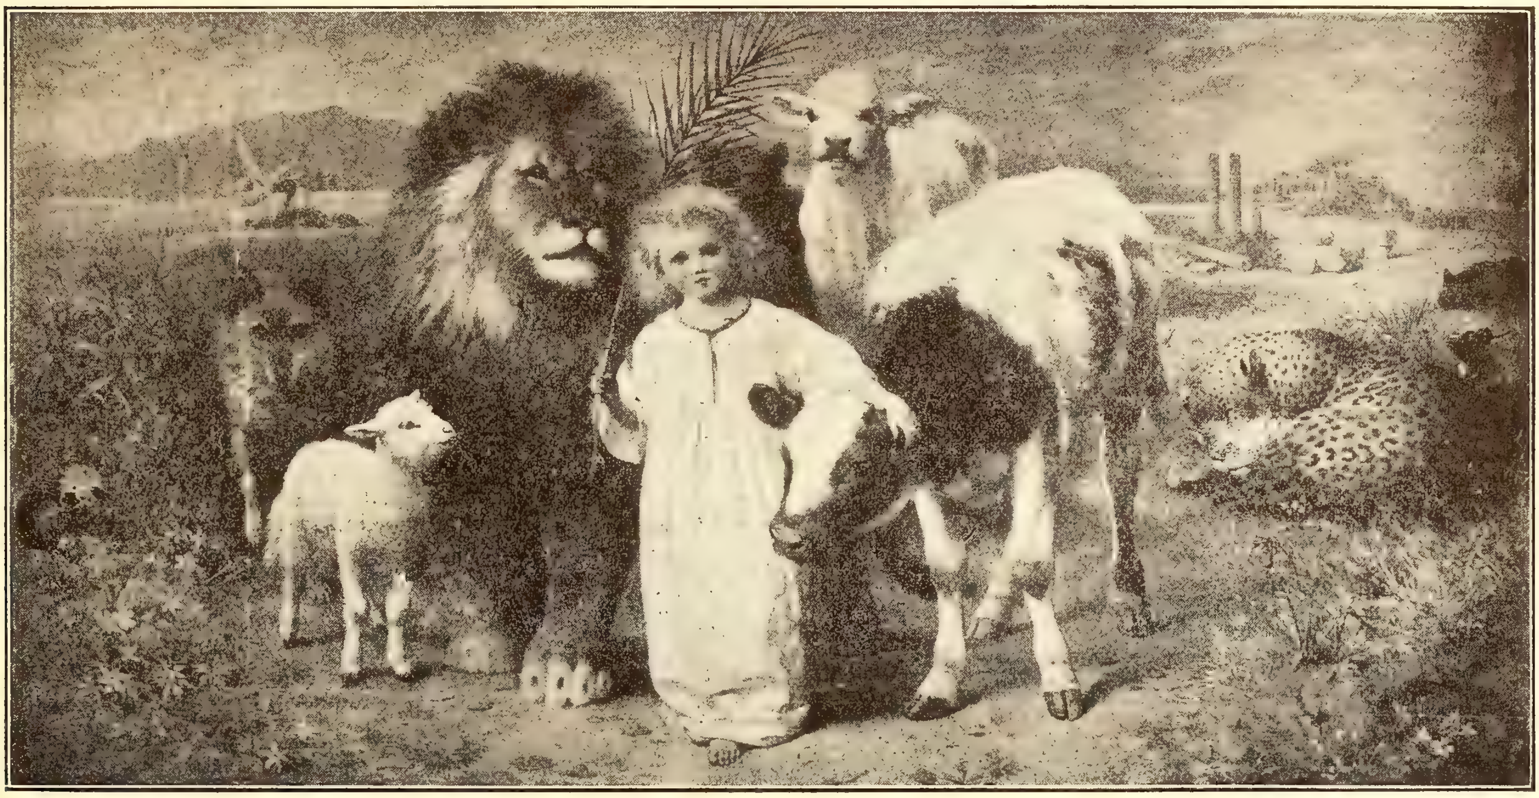
There are given to us by the Prophet Isaiah two pictures of the Messiah who was to come. In the first, we have a little child set in the midst of the animal world. This picture fitly represents the brutal animal forces of human nature that were dominant at the coming of Christ. The lion, the leopard, the bear, the asp, all represent the cruel, fierce, untamed forces or elements of human nature. The cow, the calf, the lamb, the kid, represent the patient, serviceable, domestic side of life. A child in the midst, leading, restraining, taming, unifying the spirit of all. A child, the most helpless of all creatures infusing a new spirit into life, changing the whole spirit and nature of human kind. The other picture presents a child born, as growing into a great and expanding spiritual force that permeates all life and institutions of mankind, changing for the better all things. "Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace." All these convey the idea of spiritual force in different forms. In both figures is the promise of redemption for humanity. It is well on the return of the Christmas occasion, while our minds are full of the joys and festivities, to consider the deeper meaning of the event that we thus celebrate.

I. Let us then consider the Child and the world into which he came. Here are two distinct ideas: First, the world into which he came. What kind of a world was it? The picture of the prophet fairly represents it. The lion, the wolf, the leopard, the cow, the lamb, the kid; it was a world in which brutal forces were regnant, the weak the prey of the strong.

Take the Roman world of that day as an illustration. Pagan Rome stands for an all-conquering power. In his letter to the Romans, Paul said: "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God." It was one kind of power matched against another. Paul thought of power as the dominant idea of Rome. The tread of her armies and the force of her arms had shaken the world. The few were masters, the many were slaves. Her generals came back from the wars of conquest, dragging the bodies of their vanquished foes through the streets of Rome, behind their chariots. To afford their people pleasure, gladiators were trained to kill each other and to fight wild beasts in the arena. Gluttony and starvation existed side by side. Ruler after ruler came to the throne through assassination. In the immediate locality to which the Christ-child came, a Herod ruled. The highest Jewish court abounded in men who did not scruple to set aside justice, and to resort to subornation to condemn one whom they desired to destroy. Power counted for everything. One has said of the spirit of that time: "Roman religion was faith in the magic of the Roman name, and the irresistibleness of the Roman arms, a worship of brute force, hard, unfeeling, coarse." Rome's dominion was universal, and it was a reign of brute force.

That was the character of the Roman world; what of the Jewish? From the New Testament story we know what a pitiful spectacle it presented. In the fact that the leaders demanded the death of Jesus, the brutal spirit is shown. One or two sentences will tell something of the feeling the nation had toward other peoples. The Jew, speaking in the Fourth book of Esdras, thus addresses God: "On our account thou hast created the world. Other nations, sprung from Adam, thou hast said, are nothing and are like spittle, and thou hast likened their multitude to the droppings of a cask. But we are thy people whom thou hast called thy firstborn, thine only begotten, thy well beloved. A single Israelite is of more worth in the sight of God than all the nations of the world; every Israelite is of more value before him than all the nations who have been or will be." It was indeed a hard, brutal, cruel world into which Christ came.

Second, "A little child shall lead them." The most helpless thing imaginable is a little child. The child of a humble Jewish peasant girl, the reputed son of a carpenter. The child of a people who were regarded with loathing and contempt by the Romans. When one came to Rome from the scenes of battle at Jerusalem and told of the slaughter of many thousands of Jews in two battles waged by Vespasian, a Roman is reported to have said: "Have you nothing more worth talking about than that?" Look upon the world dominated by such brutal ideas as that, then look upon this child of apparent weakness, and what promise can you see for the future of humanity? Look at the problem from that end and where is the ground of hope? Yet the prophet saw a gleam of light and hope for mankind. "A little child shall lead them." The savage beasts shall under his lead, consort together in peace and quiet with the domestic animals, the strength of the one shall be given to the other. As each recurring Christmas comes the marvel grows. The contrast, the brutal world and the little Child, the one to be tamed by the other—that is the marvel of the ages. But the little Child is to lead, the world is to be tamed and made tender and glorious. That is the task.



II. By what force is this to be accomplished? By a Divine spiritual force. Both prophecies tell us that. By a force that finds its characteristic expression in the little Child. Malachi said, "I will send you Elijah the prophet before the great and terrible day of the Lord come, And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children and the heart of the children to the fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." That means that there shall be a blending of the child life and the mature life of mankind by the power of love. Love is a heart power. The qualities that are characteristic of the little child are heart qualities. Love is the highest expression of life. So in adult life, when normal, the qualities that respond to the presence of the little child are heart qualities. Love is the natural response. It is often said that it is not on the birth of Christ, but on his death that the divine scheme of salvation rests. On this basis theological systems and theories rest. The death of Christ was in payment of a debt, or it was a sacrifice made to reconcile God to man, or to propitiate his favor. Christ said "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son." Paul said, "God commendeth his love toward us." John said "Hereby we perceive the love of God," and "Herein is love." According to this view the death of Christ was an expression of that same divine force that is predominant in the little child, love. It is through the power of love that God would reconcile, save, and uplift the world. That is what Napoleon said of Christ's kingdom in contrast with his own: "Alexander, Cæsar, Charlemagne, and myself founded empires. On what did we rest the creations of our genius? Upon force. Jesus Christ alone founded his empire upon love; and at this hour millions of men would die for him." The difference in the two empires is in the kind of force employed to upbuild and maintain them. That relying upon physical force will fall to pieces when the master is withdrawn, but that which rests upon love will abide. What are the truths that Christ brought into the world to save it? They are three.

First, the universal Fatherhood of God. Love is the highest expression of this relationship.

Second, the universal brotherhood of man, with good will and service as its highest expression.

Third, eternal life as the supreme gift, result, and reward. and this springing out of love in the heart of God and man.

Now, Christ brought these great ideas into the world where brute force was enthroned, and they have been working as a leaven to the changing of the spirit of humanity. One has said: "Christianity differentiates itself from other religions more by its motive than by its commands. The laws of duty and morality, which are beautifully expressed in the Old and New Testaments, can often be found beautifully expressed in other religions. The difference seems to be in that one word which Matthew Arnold said characterized the teachings of Marcus Aurelius, beautiful, righteous, but 'ineffectual.' The effectiveness with which Christ has brought his lofty precepts to apply in the world is the most distinctive feature of the Christian faith. And how was this done? Simply by putting behind every glorious law one supreme motive. Christ set every law, every duty, against a background of love. He nailed them to the cross. How many soldiers hear the command who will follow it only when some loved leader goes with them. Even so the world hears Christ's commands because the loved Master has gone with the world. Therein lies the sharpest line of division between Christianity and any other faith, that was ever preached." So against this background of love Christ has put the duties of the home life, industrial life, governmental life, all life. The great message of the Christmas time is love. A poet has expressed this truth for us in these words:

"At first I prayed for light; could I but see the way,
  How gladly would I walk to everlasting day!
I asked the world's deep law before my eyes to ope',
And let me see my prayer fulfilled, and realize my hope.
    But God was kinder than my prayer,
    And darkness veiled me everywhere.

And next I prayed for strength, that I might tread the road,
  With firm unfaltering pace to heaven's abode;
That I might never know a faltering, failing heart,
But manfully go on and reach the highest part,
    But God was kinder than my prayer,
    And weakness checked me everywhere.

And then I asked for faith, could I but trust my God,
  I'd live in heavenly peace, though foes were all abroad,
His light thus shining round, no faltering should I know,
And faith in heaven above would make a heaven below.
    But God was kinder than my prayer,
    And doubts beset me everywhere.

And now I pray for love, deep love to God and man,—
  A love that will not fail, however dark His plan;
That sees all life in Him, rejoicing in His power,
And faithful though the darkest clouds of gloom and doubt may lower.
    But God is kinder than my prayer,
    Love fills and blesses everywhere."

Let us pray evermore for love, "deep love to God and man," and we shall not only have love, but we shall also have light and strength and faith, and indeed all things else that we may need, for this love is the greatest thing in the world, and being the greatest it includes the less.

"Come to Us Christmas, Good Old Day"

Christ, the Revealer.

The Babe of Bethlehem! May he be enshrined in our hearts, showing us those things that are hid from the wise and prudent and revealed unto babes!

Carthage, O. Chas. M. Fillmore.

"The Prince of Peace!"

"And on earth peace, good will toward men." These words, spoken by the angelic host on the night of the Nativity, were a prophecy of the great blessing of the kingdom that was soon to be inaugurated upon the earth and whose spread among the nations would surely hasten the day when men "shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks; when nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Just as the spirit of the Christ fills the souls of men and dominates their life, so will men be at peace among themselves, the schisms in the body of Christ healed; international differences arbitrated, resulting in disarmment, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. Hasten, thou, thy reign of peace in all the earth, O Christ.

Columbus, O. Walter Scott Priest.

The First Great Gift.

What am I doing with God's great gift, Jesus Christ, himself? This is a question which always comes to me, over and over, with increasing interest, at Christmas time. Am I showing my gratitude to God for his unspeakable gift, by giving him lovingly, unselfishly, and unstintingly the best service of my life? Am I bestowing my gifts of whatever sort, entirely careless of my own happiness? In our giving, we should be moved only by the needs of others. We should not give because someone else has given to us, or because we expect them to give in return for our gifts. "God maketh the sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." If we shall give thus unselfishly, we shall be the children of our Father. S. D. Dutcher.

The Joy of Sacrifice for Others.

Christmas is a benediction to all humanity. All alike rejoice and are made better in the celebration of the birth of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. The beautiful spirit of the Christ rules in us and we love to have a part in making just as many of God's children happy as possible. Sacred memories of other Christmases fill our minds, and we live over again the glad days of our childhood. We give expression to our joy in the bestowal of gifts and love tokens. We are remembered with gifts, and are glad, but the exquisite joys of the season come to those only who gladly give and sacrifice as did the Christ.

A Christmas Meditation.

Christmas night. Night of the advent of our Lord. Blessed night of the beginning of peace. Night of the world's hopes. Night of the poor man's enrichment. Morning of the world's redemption. The angels sang a sweeter and a fuller story than anyone then knew, and far sweeter than many thousands now living have ever realized. God is among men. His mercy is embodied in that matchless life. His holiness shines forth from every page of the wonderful story of Jesus' birth and life. Let cold materialism; let over-fed sensualism and luxury; let pinching mammonism; let languishing indifference and shiftlessness—and every other blight upon the world—within or without the church—be purged away from me as I meditate upon the sacrifice and humiliation, and the glory that followed, which had their beginning on the night of our Lord's advent. H. A. Denton.

The Significance of Song.

Is it not significant that the first proclamation of the Savior's birth was made in song? Is this not a standing proof of its inspiration to life's noblest ideals? Doubt does not sing. Fear fits none of the harmonies of music. Hate finds no expression in anthems of praise. Only faith, hope, and love sing. The highest evidence of the divinity of our Lord is that his entrance into the world was heralded by a burst of song and that its echoes have been heard in all lands and in every age. May the power of this message fill our hearts.

Bethany, Neb. W. P. Aylsworth.

Givers of Gifts.

Christmas is the season of good cheer. It means vastly more than mere feeding and feasting, and the lavish bestowal of gifts. It is beyond all else a time when the poor should be clothed and warmed, and the hungry be fed. The happiness that comes to all relieved sufferers is shared by those who help to relieve the suffering. The giver is himself the richer for his gift. It is more blessed to give than to receive. The greatest joy of the Christmastide is the quickening of the life into full sympathy with him who brought peace on earth, good will to men.

Eureka, Ill. R. E. Hieronymus.

Our Christmas Gifts.

The list of friends has been selected with care. We have remembered the favors received in days gone by and tried to select presents worthy of them. Are we sure that no one has been omitted from our list? Not one? What have you selected for your best friend? The one to whom you owe everything? But you say, "I have been paying my part all year." Yes, you have also been feeding, clothing and educating your children all year, but you will give them something extra for Christmas. Why not make Christmas a time when we will give something extra for the Lord's work? J. A. Longston.

Independence, Kas.

The Children's Festival.

Jesus coronated childhood and Christmas is, above all else, the children's festival. The holiday season, as it is in our cities, both large and small, is an exhibition of commercialism rampant; tradesmen vying with one another in keen competition and salespeople wearing themselves out in the mad rush of Christmas shoppers. Moreover, with many this is the season for dissipation and carousal. How unseemly all this! If there is any one day above all others in the year when the drunkard should go home sober and in his right mind it is at blest Christmastide. Nor is this the season for the exchange of costly gifts. It is the children's festival and if one has the money only to purchase a single gift, let it be a toy for a child. Tell the little tots what Christmas means. Repeat the "old, old story" of Jesus cradled in a manger and dying at last on Calvary for the sin of the world. Make the day one of sunshine and good cheer and redolent with the spirit of the Christ-teaching. Edgar D. Jones.

Making Hearts Happy.

Our thought should be Christ blessed. Our whole being should be keenly awake to the wonderful life. Let us open our eyes and we will behold the King in his beauty just in measure as we see the needs of our fellows. Let our ears be unstopped and we will hear the Master's voice in our inmost soul just in measure as we hear the cry of human distress—the call of the hungry, the naked, the sick and the prisoner. Somehow the Prince of Peace had a way of knowing how hearts could be made happy. Have we caught the spirit?

Shelbina, Mo. J. H. Wood.

What Does Christmas Mean to Me?

Does it mean that I am to have a jolly good time in much merry-making, feasting with friends, in which there is a round of physical dissipation? If this is its meaning, all that I get out of it, then it is a detriment and not a blessing.

But it means to me this: I have a precious Savior who is able to cleanse me from all unrighteousness; able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day; able to lead me in the way of life; able to give me the best of this world, and a home in heaven, when I have finished my course.

If it means this much to me (and I think it does, and more), then I can not afford to be disloyal to such a Savior. I must take up my cross daily and follow after him. J. H. Smart.

Decatur, Ill.

"What Means this Lowly Birth?"

The Magi wondered as they worshipped the Christ on that first Christmas morning, and for all men there is increasing charm in the significance of this lowly birth. Born amid plainest surroundings, it was revealed that redemption is not through riches; without the show of learning, thus proving that salvation is not through wisdom; without the presence of the military power, thus evidencing that the Kingdom does not come by force of arms. In a word, such a birth makes Jesus a brother to the race.

He identifies himself with us in all the varied experiences of our lives. And we can feel that no social nor intellectual barrier keeps us from him, since he was reared in such a lowly estate.

And up from this manger birth he rose with the flight of the days to the divine task of human redemption.

Terre Haute, Ind. L. E. Sellers.

It Closes the Chasm.

Since the coming of God into human nature, the chasm that separated God from man has been closed. All human nature has now the offer of striking a higher level of being in Christ, through Christ and by means of Christ. Jesus Christ has therefore become not simply a dead stepping stone to a higher level, but he has become "a new and living way"—an avenue of approach to the mind and heart of the living God. Since the incarnation man becomes "partaker of the divine nature." In all other religions man is left to search after God, but in the Christian religion God is seen to be searching after man. A great writer has expressed the thought in the following words: "It is the teaching alike of the Scriptures and of philosophy that it is primarily God who seeks man, not primarily man who seeks God."

Sedalia, Mo. J. M. Rudy.

Methods of Evangelization

Being the Third Part of the Address before the Buffalo Convention on "Disciples and Evangelism."

By J. P. Lichtenberger

Paul was the first great Methodist; becoming all things to all men, that he might gain some. Method is nothing, to gain men is everything. Yet, because all men are to be won by some method, method is everything.

1. Conforming Practice to Theory.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman began his address before the federation conference in New York last November with this significant sentence: "If the church should maintain the position which in the plan and purpose of God she was ever meant to hold, special evangelistic meetings would be unnecessary." The doctrine of the open door into the church, "which no man can shut," has been a tremendous power in the growth of our movement. But there has been a diminution in evangelistic effort in our regular services, and a growing tendency to depend upon the revival method. Some of us have been so long teachers, historians, lecturers, that we have lost the art of evangelistic preaching. Has not the hour come for a revival of evangelism in our regular services? The tree of life yields its fruit every month. Let the centennial crusade be characterized by a regular, persistent, perennial revivalism in all our churches. Our membership can not be doubled by the time of the centennial celebration by the protracted meeting method. Some of our best evangelistic preachers seldom hold meetings, and the growth of many of our churches at regular services exceeds those which rely upon the meeting method. I am not decrying the revival. I believe in the revival, but, with Dr. Chapman, as an expedient and not as the natural method. Our custom of receiving members at any of our services has often been the envy of some of the brethren in other churches. Shall we cease to use it to the full extent of its value?

2. The Undenominational Plea.

Another tremendous advantage in our evangelism is our undenominational plea. The large experience in union evangelistic work throughout America led Dr. Chapman in that same address to say: "One does not require very much experience to realize that it is vastly easier to make Christians of the unconverted than to manufacture Presbyterians, or Methodists, or Baptists." He is nearly a century late in this discovery. This has been our universal experience. Again, many among our religious neighbors have discovered with the shoemaker in "Hiram Goff's Religion," "that if they lose Christ in the church and simply hold to the denomination they have very little left; but if they lose the denominational mark, and hold to the Christ, which is the heart of the church, they have lost very little."

And yet, brethren, have we not frequently proclaimed an undenominational gospel in a sectarian spirit? Have we always impressed a community that our chief aim was to win men to Christ rather than build up a particular church? Has our plea always seemed unsectarian to those who heard it? Has not our theory sometimes outrun our practice?

Of all the religious peoples in America we should be the leaders in union evangelistic effort. We should be supplying the country with union evangelists. As a matter of fact we have often lagged behind the procession. We have witnessed the peculiar enigma of all the churches in a community engaged in union evangelistic effort but the church committed to that plea. We are only now beginning to come into our estate. Let the recent union meetings of Wright, Scoville, Rudy and others be the beginning of a great wave of union evangelistic effort instituted, fostered, generaled by men who are heart and soul committed to an undenominational plea, and not only will the religious world take us seriously, but God will pour out upon us a blessing such as we have not hitherto received. Let us become the initiators of such a movement. Let us hesitate only before conditions that compromise conviction or limit the evangel. The most significant event in evangelism among the Disciples in a decade, is the decision of H. O. Breeden to resign the pastorate of his great church in Des Moines to enter the field as a union evangelist.

A union meeting arrests the attention of a city. It creates a religious atmosphere. It commands the united force of the whole church. It forestalls prejudice and strengthens the conviction among the unchurched, that after all, we are more interested in saving them than in the perpetuation of our sectarian rivalries. A positive constructive work of a few weeks, heartily entered into by all Christian people in any community, will advance the kingdom. Destructive denunciation will hinder its progress. Simultaneous campaigns have demonstrated the power of a united host. But how tremendously more effective would such campaigns be were the whole church of God enlisted in the enterprise.

But some will say, How shall we do this and preserve our individuality and our distinctive plea? In the name of God, brethren, are we here to preserve an individuality and a plea, or to win the world to Christ? Have we come to the kingdom at such a time as this, with the religious world aglow with evangelistic fire, and our hands so tied by precedent and tradition that we can not participate our full share in the mighty ongoing triumphs of the army of God? Are we so wedded to our idols that we shall permit others with more modest pretensions to lead us in this glorious crusade?

3. The New Evangelism.

Within a year in our religious papers there have been articles on "The Old Evangelism," "The New," "The Newer," and "The Newest Evangelism." This serves to emphasize the diverse needs of different fields. Any kind of evangelism in our age will be selective. There is no semblance of a universal type of religious thought in America to-day. In their religious conceptions men range all the way from ultra-conservatism to ultra-radicalism. Estimated in terms of mass, conservative views largely predominate. If in terms of intellectual culture, progressive views are in the ascendency. Our gospel has a mighty message for the masses and must still be proclaimed in the spirit and power of Wesley, Whitefield, and Finney. But it has likewise a message for the cultured and the educated. I have heard recently two evangelists in our city. They addressed different audiences. One delivered a message in thunderous tones on the terrors of the judgment, of which Jonathan Edwards would have had no reason to be ashamed, and rough men trembled with fear. The other, with calm, yet passionate logic, drove home the arrows of conviction to the hearts of a cultured throng. Both were greatly blessed of God. Both had an important message and mission. Those who decry either are men of narrow vision.

New methods of presenting the old message are being greatly blessed to-day. Perhaps the time has come for some of us to make fundamental changes in our methods. In the great cities, street meetings, tent meetings, theatre meetings, are attracting wide attention.

As a method applicable to cities of almost every rank I wish particularly to advocate the use of theatres for religious services. On this subject Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis recently said: "The forty closed theatres on Sunday afternoon and Sunday night are challenges to the preachers of New York—either we can go into these theatres on Sunday nights and reach the people or we will find within ten years that Sunday night will be a theatre night from New York to San Francisco. In the 18th century, when the country people were unreached, God raised up Wesley in England to reach them by open air preaching. In the 19th century God raised up Gen. Booth to reach the submerged classes of the great cities. Now the hour has come, in a country where open air preaching is impossible for eight months in the year, for some new apostle of evangelism to rise up and organize a new denomination to utilize all the theatres of the country in the great cities and small factory towns for evangelistic preaching on Sunday afternoons and evenings. If we are going to keep the Sunday in American life we must use the Sunday."

Is not this our challenge? What greater impetus could be given our centennial crusade than that from every theatre throughout the land our plea for the simple gospel should be sounded forth. What was done in Manchester may be done in a thousand cities. In our Scoville meetings in the Lenox Avenue Union Church last spring, while our building was ample for all our audiences, Harlem Opera House, the largest and best theatre building above Fifty-ninth street, on Sunday evening, April 22, was entirely inadequate. The doors were open but twenty minutes until they had to be closed against hundreds who sought admission. The offering was ample to cover the expense of the meeting (over $200) and allowed us to send $50 to the relief of the brethren in San Francisco. Let us make the experiment in a thousand theatres. Let us send out the message which God has committed to us from these great gathering places of the people.

CHAPTER IX.

Brother Paper-Hanger Reviewed.

"I can imagine conditions," said Brother Lawyer, "under which a bull in a china shop would be the right 'critter' in the right place, even from the standpoint of the owner of the shop. Assume that business is stagnant, expenses certain and collections uncertain, and that the owner has an accident policy on his stock; then let a bull invade the premises, and the owner may soon cash his policy; and he will have, moreover, a good excuse for making an assignment. It is conceivable also, that in any china shop there will be accumulations of things that ought to be smashed, if only to make room for more merchantable stuff. For that purpose, however, somebody with more judgment than a bull would be required; some one with a better knowledge of values, with a better eye for artistic effects; some one whose knowledge of china would prevent costly mistakes.

"Also I can imagine communities where aggressive reformers, of the bull-in-the-china-shop type, may come as great, heaven-sent blessings. There are communities and churches where the people have grown torpid, fat-hearted, somnolent, lazy, their moral faculties tending to atrophy for lack of exercise. Such people need to be stirred up by something sudden and strenuous; something like a hawk in the barn yard, a bear in the hog pen, a nigger in the hen house, a lizard at the camp-meeting, or, as aforesaid, a bull in a china shop. The man who is content to serve them in that way will be sure to interest them, will probably make them angry, may throw them into fits, may or may not do them good, but he can not hurt them. Nevertheless, evanescence and strenuousness—that kind of strenuousness—are closely related qualities. If we stop to think we perceive that this must be so. I suppose that when we come to understand all things as they are, we shall see the beneficent purpose of the cyclone—shall understand the particular great mission it has to perform. Yet we know, right now, without waiting for all the mysteries to be unveiled, that no matter what good a cyclone does, it can not expect to be permanently employed in any community. Whatever it does it must do quickly; it must pass rapidly on to the next job; and we seldom or never see that the people in whose midst it has done a great work are anxious to have it come back. So with the bull in the china shop; he may work acceptably for a season, but the season is necessarily brief.

"If a man desires to distinguish himself as a moral cyclone; if he is willing to be a bull in the social and moral china shop, who shall say him nay? Who shall say he has not been called and chosen to that work before the foundation of the world?

"Once, in my boyhood, I was going home, with what my father called a 'small jag of hay,' on a wagon. A cloud was rising in the west and I felt sure it would rain before I could get home; but a gad-fly stung the oxen, causing them to run away, so that I and the wagon and some of the hay got home before the shower. Up to that time I had never been able to see where there was any use for a gad-fly. I dare say that for ages and ages nobody could guess why the Lord had taken the trouble to make the hornet, until he sent him to labor for a season with the Hivites, the Canaanites, and Hittites. Always, however, the labors of the cyclone, the bull-in-the-china-shop, the gad-fly, and the hornet, while bitter and keen and thorough-going, must be done hurriedly; and if a preacher elects, or is irresistibly impelled, to do that sort of work, let a brief, busy, nerve-thrilling season of labor suffice him—in any given field. Thrice is that human hornet armed who knows that, whatever happens, he has the trade of paper-hanging to fall back on; a rebellious and stiff-necked generation of elders and deacons may 'fire' him from his pulpit, but they can not starve him.

"Our brother spoke of 'hurling thunder-bolts' at various offenders, and perhaps the verbal weapons he used may very well be likened to thunder-bolts, in their devastating effects. To be witty; to have fine powers of sarcasm; to be master of irony; and to be able to use all these so as to cause the most possible pain to a given victim; if any man have these gifts in any appreciable measure, let his prayer be, 'Lord, lead me not into temptation.' A man might obtain from these things results not unlike the effects of thunderbolts, but they are so apt to scorch the fingers of the man who hurls them. I can not imagine anything more dangerous to a preacher of the Word than to possess such gifts and to know that he possesses them. They must be a constant temptation to him; and if the grace of God dwell not richly in his heart, at all times, he is sure to do mischief to himself and others. Most of us, I suppose, would like to wield the thunderbolts of Jove, but we should be almost certain to abuse the privilege, if we had it. We should like to see the dust (or the fur) fly, and hear the racket; and the Lord only knows what mischief we might do.

"Could great men thunder
As Jove himself does, Jove would ne'er be quiet,
For every pelting, petty officer
Would use his heaven for thunder: nothing but thunder."

"No; I reckon nobody but Jove himself has the requisite wisdom and judgment to go into the thunderbolt business. Let us take counsel of something higher than ourselves before we go to blazing away too recklessly at our fellows. If irony, wit, sarcasm, are to be classed among the thunderbolts, and if we will use them, let us practice exclusively on men of straw or on wooden dummies: the heart of a fellow-mortal, the heart of a fellow-Christian, especially, is no fit target for our marksmanship."

A Christmas Prayer.

THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

O'er far Judæa's sacred hills
A joyous cry was heard,
"A king is born in Bethlehem;"
All men took up the word.
Unto the lowly manger crib
Came peasant, seer, king;
And, bending low, by love inspired,
Brought each his offering.

O Saviour, on this Christmas day,
Our gifts we bring to thee;
No gold, no frankincense and myrrh
We bear on bended knee:
Our minds we bring, to make them thine;
Our hearts, to know thy love;
Our hands—O teach them ever, Lord,
At thy command to move.

Two Babes of Bethlehem.

BY LOUIS S. CUPP.

Ruth, the Moabitess, gleaning in the fields of Boaz, a wedding such as had not been seen for many a day in Bethlehem, then another harvest; but Ruth goes no more out to glean. There is a baby in the house. It is a house of joy. The village women gather to bless Jehovah that a child is born in Bethlehem. The kinsmen come to rejoice that a son is given, saying, "He shall be a restorer of life." And this babe became the grandfather of King David, ancestor of the Messiah.

As we listen to the story, the bells of that far-off Christmas begin to echo through the years. Another babe is in Bethlehem, in a stable, lighted by a star. And everywhere there is joy. This world loves childhood more since Jesus came, and the bells of gladness can never cease their ringing.

Good News From Darkest Africa

By Mrs. R. J. Dye

Two weeks ago we had the pleasure of entertaining a party of the Baptist Missionary Society's missionaries over Lord's day. They arrived Saturday noon, a party of ten on their new steamer, "The Endeavor," en route to their up-river stations, Bopoto and Yakusu, which we visited a year ago on our vacation trip. This party was made up partly of old and partly of new missionaries so what comments they made on the Bolengi work were especially interesting to us, and I thought, perhaps, would be to you. Because of my illness they insisted that they should have all their meals on the steamer so we enjoyed their dropping in all times of day and having a quiet chat.

All attended the morning services at 10 a. m. save Mrs. Kirby, of Bopoto, who remained with me until time for the communion service when Bro. Hensey came for her to go. Mr. and Mrs. Kirby are just returning from a furlough home, where they left little Vera. On their way up-river they heard of the very impressive communion service at Bolengi and were anxious to see it. It must be impressive for its very simplicity for it is observed in the good old way. Every absent member is remembered by name.

TWENTY-TWO CONVERTS RECENTLY BAPTIZED AT BOLENGI.

On their return from this meeting they found my room full of visitors, many very old women and most of our Christian babies, as we term the children of Christian parents, who call on me after the service. They had been struck with the number of white-haired women especially, none of them ever having seen them in church before anywhere.

Mrs. Kirby said she had not come out with any definite work in view for this term, but she had seen her vision and it should be her purpose now to endeavor to win the aged mothers at Bopoto. Mr. and Mrs. Wilford, of Yakusu (Stanley Falls), were also interested in this, and as she is coming out for the first time it gave her an incentive also, for what has been done here can be done elsewhere. As they were gathered about me I pointed out a white-haired mother, her older sister, her middle-aged daughter and three grandchildren, all of the older three being Christians, three generations reached in that one family.

One other thing noted by them was the Christian men and their wives seated together in the middle row of seats, a custom not observed elsewhere, usually the men being seated all on one side and the women on the other. Mr. Howell has seen many years' service in Congo, having come out under the L. I. M. and later transferring to the B. M. S. He is a missionary steamer captain and sees all the stations on the main river at least twice yearly. He was surprised to see the large audience and deep attention and said that our people were much more anxious for the gospel than those on the lower river. He was greatly pleased with the outlook here and interested in the numbers of Bosira workmen seeking salvation, seeing as do we a possible opening to that great unopened country. The natives were pleased to see so many white teachers at the service and several expressed the wish that Bolengi alone could have as many as that.

At 3 p. m. all gathered in my room informally to have an English tea, more that we might all be together once. Just a cup of black tea, bread and butter, cake (made by Bolengi's famous white-boy cooks) and an enjoyable half hour of happy fellowship.

At 4 p. m. Sunday-school was called and all went back not prepared for what they found. There are a few Sunday-schools in Upper Congo, but ours is unique in that it is conducted on the European plan being divided into classes with native teachers, who have been given the lesson previously. Every one felt this to be the best service of all, there being such a crowd of children as well as older people. When walking about the "park," as they call our station, they had wondered at the wooden benches out under the trees by the chapel, and now they saw their purpose, for all the younger classes have their class rooms in the beautiful shady gallery over-arched by the palms and mammoth tropical trees. They were surprised to see Christian girls and women teaching classes so intent upon the lesson that nothing distracted their attention. Here again the class of grandmothers attracted the most notice, there being about thirty present. Mrs. Kirby told them of her purpose to help their sisters at Bopoto, which pleased them very much and I heard of it from several who said she should have a special meeting for them such as we used to have, then she would get them to come. The Wilfords were enthusiastic over it all and are writing an article for the London Sunday-school Times, the greatest Sunday-school paper of England, describing it, for which we gave them some pictures.

Mr. Dodds is one of the older missionaries, previously stationed at Monsembe, which was abandoned last year, the village depopulated by State depredations and the sleeping sickness. He is now working at Bopoto also and had been down to meet his new bride at Boma. He knows this station well and was as much surprised as the home folks to know that the native church supported so many evangelists and seemed to think it almost incredible, as their evangelists and teachers all receive home support.

In the evening while the native church had their regular service, all the missionaries met together in our library where Mr. Kirby had charge of the meeting. Though not present I could enjoy the music and enter into the spirit of the hour. As they came to say good night and good-bye, I believe every one felt that it had been a day of rich blessing and sweet fellowship.

Early the next morning they steamed away leaving only the usual group of sick folk from the down river stations brought to see the doctor. "The Endeavor" is the finest mission steamer yet launched on the Congo, costing $35,000 raised by the Christian Endeavorers of Great Britain.

You will be glad with us to know that during the month of June I gained faster than for several previous months. We feel greatly encouraged as we now seem able to ward off the hard heart spells which kept me so long in the valley of shadow. The turn for the better came unexpectedly and suddenly and we feel that it has been an answer to offering of prayer being raised for us in the home land. During the last few months we have received several letters from total strangers both in Canada and America, who though not knowing of our extremity, had felt peculiarly drawn to think of us and write to us. Surely God's mysteries are still most wonderful.

During the recent trip of the S. S. Livingstone down river it waited over here a few days and one day I was bundled up, carried in a hammock on board where a traveling bed was prepared on deck to receive me, and Captain McDonald, missionary of the C. B. M., took us up and down the river while I drank in the sweet fresh air and felt once more that I was really alive.

We are happy and encouraged to hear of reinforcements. We shall stay as long as possible, you may be sure. Since last spring our little daughters have been very well. Polly is enjoying her school and being a little mother to Dorcas. She is trying to save up $5 for Children's day offering so she is beginning her missionary life already.

Our Budget

—"A merry Christmas" to all our readers!

—May your stockings all be filled, on "the night before Christmas"!

—If not, however, we are sure they will all be filled on Christmas morning—before breakfast!

—But the main thing is to see that your hearts are filled with joy and gratitude for God's great Christmas gift to the world.

—Kindly greetings to all our fellow editors of the religious press. May they all have a prosperous year to come, even according as their prosperity maketh for the welfare of Zion.

—"Agnes of the Bad Lands." This is the title of the new serial story which will begin in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of January 3, 1907. We think it will prove a very interesting story from the story standpoint, while the moral will not be lost because of the fiction element. We trust that a great many new subscribers may be obtained to start in with the new story.

—There were 70 names on the annuitant list of the Board of Ministerial Relief last year. These men and women have been through the fight and have come out as heroes and heroines, but they are lacking in this world's goods. If you had no part in the regular Sunday offering last Lord's day and want to help support the old preachers and their wives or widows, send a contribution to the Board of Ministerial Relief, 120 E. Market street, Indianapolis, Ind.

—The brethren at Princeton, Ind., will repair their building.

—The dedication of our church at Granite City will be held December 27.

—W. W. Sniff has resigned at Rushville Ind., and accepted a call to Paris, Ill.

—A meeting at Ames, Okla., resulted in almost the doubling of the membership.

—L. E. Murray will begin a meeting with F. D. Muse at Daleville, Ind., December 30.

—W. S. Hood is to be employed as evangelist of the Dade county (Mo.) convention.

—George E. Hopkins writes enthusiastically of the meeting held by F. A. Bright, formerly evangelist of Western Pennsylvania, at Bellaire, Ohio.

—The church at Dresden, Kan., has never had any pastoral care, writes A. R. Poe, but he believes that in a year's time he will have it in a good condition.

—The Central Church, Wichita, Kan., is planning for a great forward movement January 27, when Joseph Powell, of Buffalo, N. Y., and Z. T. Sweeney will be with them.

—Charles A. Lockhart's work at the Central Christian Church, Waco, Texas, has started auspiciously and plans are being made for a great meeting one year hence.

—A man 95 years of age has just united with our church at Caldwell, Kan., where Lee H. Barnum's pastorate will close January 1. Brother Barnum has not accepted any other work as yet.

—J. M. Rhodes, of Newkirk, Okla., has been called to the pastorate of the church at New Franklin, Mo., where A. N. Lindsey did such a good work, and will enter upon the field January 1.

—O. L. Adams has just held a good meeting at Barnes, Kan., where there had not been a baptism for three years. There are five church buildings in the town but only three, if our information be correct, being used.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST force enjoyed the pleasure of a call from A. M. Harral while visiting friends in St. Louis. The women of his church this year observed C. W. B. M. day for the first time and had a fine service.

—Edward Clutter has just closed a year's work at Irvington and Florence, suburbs of Omaha. There were 71 additions to the churches. He is now in Cotner University and will be ready to make dates for meetings after June 15, 1907.

—The church at Marshall, Mo., is planning for a meeting to begin January 1, in which the pastor, B. T. Wharton, who is, by the way, a brother of the lamented Bro. G. L. Wharton, will be assisted by A. N. Lindsey, of Clinton, Mo.

—A number of contributions on "The Missing Link," bearing on the proposed revision of the constitution of the A. C. M. S., coming in a little late, are necessarily laid over till next week, as Christmas has the right of way.

—The average Sunday-school attendance at Jacksonville, Ill., where R. F. Thrapp is pastor, and C. B. DePew is superintendent, has been over 600 for this year, while, as reported in our last issue, the attendance was nearly 1,000 a week or two ago.

—H. L. Maltman, minister at Bloomingdale, Mich., writes us that among those who joined the church, at a recent meeting of J. S. Raum, was Mr. R. A. Stokes, of Toronto, Canada, who will devote his life to the work of singing evangelist.

—J. H. Hardin, who has just been holding a Bible Institute at Lamar, Mo., where he organized a Teachers' Training Class, and had three additions to the church, reports S. G. Clay working in such a way as to insure great results in the near future.

—T. J. Golightly, of Bethany, Mo., recently held a meeting at Oakland, a country church, in which there were 26 additions, 20 being by baptism. James E. Hawes, of Ada, O., is now with him in a meeting at Bethany as leader of the chorus.

—O. D. Maple will hold a meeting at Parker, Ind., in January, and at Clarinda, Ia., in February. On March 1 he goes to Cairo, Ill., for a period of nine months during which time a $12,000 church will be built and a big meeting held.

—W. D. Trumbull and wife, who are going into the evangelistic work for a time, can count 74 added to the membership at Meadville, Pa., at the conclusion of their second year there, $3,000 raised for all purposes and an increase in the different organizations.

—P. C. MacFarlane, who had been compelled to go into a sanitarium, was brought home to have Thanksgiving dinner with his family. Though much improved, the weakness caused by a long siege of inflammatory rheumatism still forces him to remain at home.

—H. C. Littleton has announced his resignation at Fairfield, Ia., to be effective January 1. During his twenty-five months' pastorate there were 165 additions. Brother Littleton has excellent recommendations and will be ready for the evangelistic field or for a pastorate.

—J. P. Childs' work during the past year was the organization of a church at Fairmont, Minn., which has increased to a membership of 77, the Sunday-school 50, and the Endeavor Society 70. A lot has been purchased and about $900 in money and subscriptions pledged for a new church. Brother Childs has resigned to go into the evangelistic work and a man of spiritual power is wanted to succeed him.

—We regret that the pressure on our space is still so great that items have to be held over or much curtailed. Among these is the report of the Violett-Clarkson meeting at Lorain, Ohio. A brief report of Brother Violett's Ohio meetings will be found under "As we go to press."

—The church at Benton, Ill., is going forward under the ministration of Lew D. Hill and wife. There has been a large increase in the Endeavor work and a gradual increase in the Sunday-school. The church not only contributed to the national offerings, but paid the pastor's expenses to the convention.

—George Darsie, minister of the First Christian Church of Christ, Akron, Ohio, writes: "The work is going splendidly here. There were 690 in the Bible school yesterday and large audiences at church. Miss Mary Graybiel spoke in the morning and more than $100 was raised as the C. W. B. M. offering."

—J. L. Callahan, writing from California, which he calls "the land of golden opportunities," says he has found many friends of other days out there in the far west and among others Bro. H. Kirk, of Berkeley, who was formerly of Akron, O., with whom he is having a royal time in talking over "the days gone by."

—Mr. and Mrs. Barton Campbell Hagerman announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary Virginia, to Dr. Halford A. Watson, Saturday evening, December 29, Argyle Hall, Lexington, Ky. The bride and groom will be at home after January 15 at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, Ill. Our congratulations to all parties concerned.

—If "pounding" is an evidence of appreciation, then Isaac Elder is held in very high esteem by his church at Hamburg, Ia., for many tokens of love have been left at the pastor's house again and again, according to W. L. Harris, who has just held a meeting for this church. But we know that Brother Elder and his wife are thoroughly worthy.

—Ivan Agee, writing from Atlanta, Ill., expresses great appreciation for himself and the church of the sermons and the services of George L. Snively, upon whose call $1,000 was raised in a few minutes to wipe out a debt of $800 that had been standing for several years. We are glad to learn that the future of Atlanta is so full of promise.

—N. G. Buckley, minister at Fitzgerald, Ga., writes that the brethren there expect to have their chapel finished in 90 days, when it will be one of the largest and best Christian church buildings in the state. This church was organized only two years ago with 37 members and went to work in a rented hall. Brother Buckley will enter upon his third year, January 1.

—The work under the leadership of W. B. Slater at N. Fairfield, O., moves steadily forward. The brethren are expecting to hold a good meeting after the holidays. This church has a membership of 135 and the observance of C. W. B. M. day has revealed the fact that the two auxiliaries with a membership of 46 paid last year $244 and much more, in the way of largeness of heart and missionary zeal.

—There will be a meeting of the National Christian Bible School Association in the Central Church, Indianapolis, December 27, 28. Addresses will be made by J. H. Hardin, W. H. McClain, J. H. Bryan, Marion Stevenson, Herbert Moninger, and Robert M. Hopkins—all leaders in Sunday-school work. The full attendance of the national executive committee is expected, writes Robert M. Hopkins, the secretary, and all Bible school workers are invited.

—Herbert Yeuell has been preaching and lecturing to crowded houses at Hutchinson, Kan., since leaving St. Louis. His aim has been the deepening of the spiritual life of the membership. Elmer Ward Cole, the popular pastor, has been on a lecture tour through the state while Brother Yeuell has occupied his pulpit. Arthur Wake is to be associated with Brother Yeuell as singer in the future, their first meeting together being at Elwood, Ind., where Robert Sellers is pastor.

—Brethren sometimes complain because we publish only two or three lines of a report that would take a column of space. It often happens that it is impossible for us to find room for the more lengthy report and we give the essential facts immediate publication reserving other details worthy of publication until a better opportunity presents. It is quite impossible for us to publish all the news that we receive, and we ask correspondents to make their reports just as brief as is consistent with the importance of the news.

—J. E. Lynn is delivering a series of Sunday evening sermons from his pulpit at the Central Church, Warren, Ohio, on "Great facts of faith in the light of modern thought," while in the morning he is giving a series of expository sermons entitled "On the way to Pentecost." All this is in preparation for the decision meetings to be held in January when A. W. Taylor, of Eureka; Ill., is to do the preaching. Brother Lynn has just led a conference at the ministerial association on plans for a co-operative effort among the churches of Warren.

—There are a great many churches that need a revival and that could be brought into usefulness did they receive any adequate care. Nelson Trimble writes of a visit to Exline, Ia., where there had not been an addition for over two years and where, since the organization of the church over fifty years ago, there had been but one missionary sermon and never congregational offering. As a result of Brother Trimble's visit there were five additions to the church, a missionary sermon, and the church as a body made an offering of $4.46 which, under the conditions, is a good start.

—Robert Simons has closed his pastorate with the church at Monett, Mo., where he had been less than two years. He found them discouraged with a mortgage of $500, but that has just been burned and it was the privilege of Joseph Gaylor to be with the brethren on this occasion to present the cause of state missions, and an offering of $300 was made. Brother Simons will go into the field as a living-link evangelist of this church, his district being southwest Missouri. He is a consecrated man and ready to hold meetings for weak churches and enter new fields. He will doubtless be a great help in bringing forward our cause in this needy district.

—I. J. Cahill's tenth anniversary of his pastorate at the Central Church, Dayton, Ohio, was recently celebrated. When Bro. Cahill became pastor of this church there was a debt of $9,000, all of which has been removed. In addition to this about $50,000 has been raised for different purposes and the additions to the church have numbered 1035. One hundred from this congregation went to the new church on the west side, and the present membership is about 800. One of the pleasant features of the anniversary was the presentation by Prof. C. L. Loos of a beautiful bouquet of American Beauty roses to the pastor as a recognition of Brother Cahill's ability and faithfulness.

—David C. Peters and his family expect to spend Christmas with the home folks at Versailles, Mo. Four years ago Brother Peters had a long siege of typhoid fever which left him with a crippled heart. This has caused him considerable trouble and at times it seemed as if he would have to surrender his work at Trinidad, Colo., and seek a lower altitude, but so far he has continued in the mountains where the work is prosperous and he is just as happy as he can be. He has recently been helping in a meeting at Rocky Ford, pastor Nelson and he assisting each other in a special evangelistic effort in both churches. Brother Peters has hopes of making an Oriental tour in February, 1908.

BOARD OF MINISTERIAL RELIEF,
120 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Ind.

—Word has come to us that Bro. John L. Dearborn, so long and favorably known as one of the leading ministers in the western part of Missouri, has passed away. Years ago when the organization known as the A. P. A. was making itself felt, he was prominent in its counsels and at one time was assaulted by thugs in Kansas City who nearly killed him. No man was more tender, none more true. His ministry was a blessing and he was loved by everyone that knew him. For several years he had been making his home with his son in Kansas City, and it was there that death found him. W. F. Richardson conducted the funeral services.

—A telegram announces the conclusion of the great meeting of the Third Church in Indianapolis with 760 additions. This is the largest city meeting our brotherhood has ever held, we believe. We shall hope to publish fuller particulars of it than we have space for in this edition. Brother Scoville's evangelistic staff now consists of six workers. Thomas Penn Ullom, as announced in our columns last week, "a spiritual dynamo," as Brother Scoville calls him, has been secured to superintend the personal work. DeLoss Smith, Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Kendall, Evangelist Scoville and wife, complete the staff, independent of the pastor and workers in a church where they may be engaged.

—J. W. Monser has chosen as a special work the filling of pulpits for those who wish to be absent on Lord's day. He can go out for 50 to 75 miles from Kansas City in any direction. Brother Monser has succeeded in giving satisfaction to the preachers in that city and those within reach of his help may be glad to know that they can secure it on reasonable notice. He may be addressed at 514 Quincy avenue. Brother Monser is one of the tried and true preachers of our restoration movement and is author of the very valuable little book just brought out by the Christian Publishing Company, entitled, "The Literature of the Disciples," which, by the way, should be in the library of all our preachers, not only as a matter of information but to inspire them to try to discover whether they have any gift in writing.

—Miss Gertrude Ward, formerly of the Central Christian Church this city, who went to Paonia, Colo., three or four years ago, writes of a great work that has been accomplished recently in that town under the leadership of J. K. Hester, who began his work there in June last. The church is erecting a new building and by wise financial management is likely to complete it with little or no indebtedness. The Christian Endeavor Society, she writes, has pledged $100 on the building fund. She asks the prayers of other Christian Endeavorers on their work out there "where the young cowboy and the ranchman may find pleasure in the Christian Endeavor meeting, instead of a saloon, pool room, and billiard hall." We congratulate this little band of Disciples and their preacher on their faithful and successful work for the Master.

—F. W. Burnham, who has accepted a call to Springfield, Ill., writes us from his present pastorate at Decatur, as follows: "The Central Church here counts itself fortunate in securing O. W. Lawrence, of Rock Island, Ill., as pastor to begin February 1. The pulpit will be vacant not more than one month, and a successor is secured some weeks before the present pastor retires. An unanimous call was extended Brother Lawrence upon the occasion of his visit to an informal reception last Monday evening, and, after carefully canvassing the matter, the call has been accepted. Our people rejoice, and I rejoice with them. The work of the year will not be seriously interrupted by our departure, and we feel that, for the future, continued prosperity is assured. This is a great church, rich in faith and zeal and is a strong factor in the life of this city. I have never seen a better spirit manifest at a critical time like this. We go to Springfield, January 1."

—We know from personal experience that where there are a number of ministers in the same vicinity and bearing the same name confusion frequently arises. This is especially true when several of the same family are in the ministry. In our issue of November 29 it was announced that O. P. Spiegel, who had been recently elected state evangelist of Alabama, is to hold a meeting early next year in North Tonawanda. Brother Spiegel is to hold a meeting, but it is his younger brother, S. P. Spiegel, who was elected state evangelist of Alabama. The information came to us through a press dispatch and the initials were not correct. S. P. Spiegel did four years of fine work as state evangelist of Alabama, but four years ago resigned, since which time he has built a beautiful church in West Point, Ga. At the recent Alabama convention, however, he was re-elected state evangelist. O. P. Spiegel was state evangelist of Alabama from 1894 to 1898 and has recently been general southern evangelist of the home board, but he is now an independent general evangelist. Another brother, J. E. Spiegel, is pastor of the First Christian Church, Corsicana, Texas, while the youngest brother, R. O. Spiegel, who was educated at Lexington, Ky., preached for a while, but his health was not good, and he now superintends an excellent Sunday-school in Alabama. The oldest brother is an active elder and "exhorter" in the home church of the Spiegels.

—The Weekly Guide, Dunn, N. C., of November 29, which has come to hand, contains a beautiful tribute to the venerable Dr. William B. Harrell, of that place, who recently departed this life. Dr. Harrell was a minister of the gospel in the Baptist church and a man of eminent piety and of most lovable character, according to the tribute paid him in his home paper. He had been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for many years and sometimes contributed to its columns. Dr. J. H. Foy, of this city, who was his friend and ardent admirer, and to whom we are indebted for this paper containing the tribute, says in a letter to the editor:

"Such lives and such deaths are exhortations to steadfastness. While earth may not be poorer since the departed 'live again in lives made better by their presence,' yet those who linger behind feel that heaven is richer and more inviting for them. Brother Harrell had learned to hold you in high esteem through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and through a book of yours. He was a good man and full of the Holy Spirit. While dying he summoned his forces, called his children around him, blessed them singly and collectively in patriarchal style, then calmly announced that he saw beyond the veil, beheld Jesus whom he loved, and the dear wife who had preceded him into the enduring life three days before. Then sank to rest,

'Calmly as to a night's repose
Like flowers at set of sun.'"

Our sympathies are extended to the bereaved family.

How an Ohio Church was Established.

A new auditorium at Springfield, O., was dedicated December 9.

About eighteen years ago the church at Springfield was organized and after a brief life a meeting was held by J. V. Updike, which resulted in a large ingathering. The church at first met in a rented building, but finally purchased a lot and erected a house of worship. It was a large undertaking for the young church and conditions were not hopeful in many ways. The church appealed to the brotherhood throughout Ohio for funds to help pay for the building, but even with the help received from outside the problem could not be solved and the burden of debt was so heavy that through the influence of Alanson Wilcox, then secretary of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society, the property was deeded over to that society.

There were various pastors in charge of the work for some years but the situation grew worse and worse until seven years ago, when the writer became secretary of the O. C. M. S., the field was about hopeless. It was one of the few missions that were being supported by the state board and received also some support from the Tenth Missionary District. The church was left pastorless very soon after the beginning of my secretaryship, and I determined to make Springfield one of the points where we should centralize our efforts in the building of a church. W. A. Harp, then of Portsmouth, where he had done a splendid work for a number of years, signified his willingness to leave Portsmouth provided a suitable field opened. I wrote to him asking him to meet me at Springfield to look that field over with a view to locating with that mission church. I wrote to Springfield calling the church together and on the evening that Brother Harp and I were there about a dozen people gathered in the dingy church building, about as hopeless a band as I have ever seen. We asked them how much they could pay toward the support of a pastor, and they said, "Nothing," that they had all they could do to keep up the expense of the church. Brother Harp saw the opportunity and consented to take the work provided the state board would stand back of him.

The first Sunday of November he entered the field. The situation was so hopeless that property owners hesitated about renting him a house because they felt he would stay but a short time. Eighteen were present at his first church service. The Sunday-school consisted of the same number and was divided into three classes. On every hand were debts annd unpaid bills. When Brother Harp suggested that the church should pay the old bills, people laughed and said they had given up all hopes of ever having them paid, but Brother Harp began paying them and paid them all. Allen Wilson was then state evangelist of Ohio and held a meeting resulting in nearly a hundred accessions and the work began to take on new life. The Sunday-school grew and little by little repairs and enlargements were made to the church building to give room to the Sunday-school. Finally the old church debt to the Church Extension Board which had been standing for years with some interest was taken up and paid, the writer being present the day the money was raised and having charge of the service. The Endeavor Society became the best in Clark County and held the banner for years in succession. Brother Harp and his good wife were giving their lives completely to the work of the Springfield church and all of its victories came through their earnest labors. After the debt was out of the way the problem of a new church building was taken up in earnest. The writer was again called to Springfield to assist in this enterprise and a little over $2,000 was raised to be paid within a year to be a sort of nest egg for the new building. The building cost more than was anticipated. It was thought at first that $5,000 was all the church could raise, but the total cost was about $8,400 for repairs to the old building and for the new auditorium. The day of the corner-stone laying came and the writer again went to Springfield, laid the corner-stone and raised for furnishing the building that day a little over $2,000. The ladies of the church for more effective service were divided into four sections or divisions, and each of these divisions went to work and raised as much or more money than is frequently raised by all of the ladies of the church for a building enterprise. Two hundred dollars a year for each division is a splendid record. Finally the church was completed; a new auditorium, beautiful to look upon, substantially built, was placed in front of the old building, a great sliding partition opening up between them, with a completely equipped basement under the whole structure.

Dedication day was rainy but the house was filled with people. There was yet $4,300 to be raised, a hard problem, but the people, under the splendid leadership of Brother Harp, went at it with a will and a little more than the necessary amount was pledged and will be paid for inside of two years.

Never had I attended a dedication service that was so enthusiastic, that had so much joy and fellowship in it. The afternoon service was remarkable. About a dozen of the preachers of the city were present and with one united voice declared that the Springfield Church of Christ is the most active and aggressive church in the whole city and set the pace in every good word and work. We that had seen it seven years ago, hopeless, discouraged and almost dead, could scarcely believe our ears. This splendid victory is the result of the consecrated efforts of W. A. Harp and his good wife and to them is due the largest measure of praise. My own relationship with the church during these seven years has been very close. I have held for them one meeting. I have been with them on every occasion when money was to be raised for debt or building. I have been asked for counsel and advice at all times, and the O. C. M. S. during the seven years paid $2,700 for pastor's support; but all of this effort has paid and paid aboundantly and the result is indeed a great victory for Christ and his church in Springfield. S. H. BARTLETT.

Something in the Interest of Bethany Assembly.

In 1849 the Indiana Missionary Society was organized. In 1863 the Ministerial Association was organized and L. L. Carpenter is the only surviving charter member. In 1868 the Indiana Sunday-school Association was organized at Wabash, and eight years later the C. W. B. M. came into existence. These different organizations held great conventions, sometimes exceeding 1,000 delegates. These proved to be a great burden on the churches entertaining and in 1881 and 1882 Island Park Assembly Grounds were used as a meeting place. At the last gathering Bethany Assembly was organized. This association bought the present grounds in the winter of 1882-1883, and during the spring of 1883 the hotel tabernacle, lake and some cottages were constructed, and in the summer of that year the first assembly was held, at which time the different state organizations held their conventions.

To-day Bethany Assembly and all that it stands for is close to the hearts of those who are most interested in the cause in Indiana. This is shown by the increase in attendance and by the many words of appreciation which we hear on every hand. The grounds have been improved from year to year, there being some splendid improvements made last year. As it now stands the assembly is out of debt, and property valued at $50,000 is the result of twenty-three years' work. Many improvements will be made this next year. The entire park has been replatted, and the plat will be recorded as prescribed by law. Many new lots are now for sale, the best on the ground. Many have been sold recently. The year 1908 will be the silver anniversary of Bethany Assembly and we suggest that we keep abreast of the spirit of the times and celebrate it. Now is the time to begin our plans for this purpose. Committees should and will be appointed in a few days. Let the aim be increase of capitalization with large amount of stock sold; new cottages in large numbers; and last and most important, a substantial endowment to insure the Bible conference and summer schools now contemplated for next year to become permanent features of the assembly. These things are plausible and a steady pull by all means that they will be accomplished. W. E. M. HACKLEMAN,

Secretary of Bethany Assembly.

Southern California and Arizona.

Arizona must be evangelized! It is a great, rich, undiscovered land to the Disciples. The secretary is out prospecting and found a rich vein of free gold the very first strike. It is at The Needles on the boundary between California and Arizona. It is 310 miles from Los Angeles and a twelve-hour run on the Santa Fe overland. To the tourist it is but a little oasis in a great desert, being one of the celebrated Fred Harvey dining stations. I was surprised to find it a thriving little city of 2,500 inhabitants. It is an important division point on the Santa Fe system. A $65,000 social and amusement hall for employes is just being finished. A new $50,000 station is in project. Six hundred Americans are employed here by the railroad, not to mention the Mexicans, Indians and Japanese. Many mines are located in this vicinity and enough ore is shipped here to keep a smelter busy. I found as many Disciples in the town as representatives of any other Protestant body. Considering their loyalty, ability and influence, they would make the strongest moral and religious factor in all this great section, if organized into a church and equipped with pastor and building. Men and their families, holding positions of trust and responsibility, such as the chief dispatcher, section master, conductors and clerks, belong to "that despised sect first called Christians at Antioch." Nearly a year ago Mrs. Mattie Woolery, the C. W. B. M. organizer, came here and organized the faithful women into an auxiliary. They have more than twenty members and recently had an open meeting, which even the Catholic priest did himself the honor of attending and giving expression to his good wishes for their moral and spiritual worth to the community. It is not a question of organizing a new church in "an overchurched town;" it is a question of maintaining a church already there. The church entered The Needles when these Disciples, by the providence of God were led there. Their duty, and ours, in the matter is plain. And so I told them when the honor and opportunity of preaching the first sermons ever proclaimed in the region round about from the point of view of one who is "simply and only a Christian," fell to me. They were promised a protracted meeting in January and if faith, courage and loyalty can do it, regular Lord's day services will be maintained thereafter.

The secretary continues his prospecting tour in Arizona. For one who had scarcely seen frost for seven years, and with the scent of roses and orange blossoms still clinging to his garments, to be dropped suddenly from a Santa Fe overland in the middle of the night on a lonely mountainside, miles and miles from anywhere, and into snow eighteen inches deep, with the thermometer eight degrees below zero, is a hard experience. But here, in a cozy "box-car Pullman" lives one of our preachers. While he regales his spent energies on the pine-flavored ozone of Arizona, he serves the Santa Fe as its faithful sentinel on this lonely mountain side. One is surprised what a neat and comfortable home a box car makes, when presided over by a Christian woman. J. Welborn Rose and wife know more about conditions and the Disciples in Arizona than any one else in the great territory, and the work is under many obligations to him for information and helpful suggestions.——A possible half dozen "scattered Disciples" can be found at Flagstaff, but conditions are not such as to warrant any organized effort just now. Flagstaff is a little city of 1,500 people, made important by its railroad, normal school and sawmill. Like all these cities, it is as wicked as hell, and in it the way that leadeth to destruction is broad, and wide the gate. In such a community the Disciples who in some way align themselves with the Christian forces already established, certainly do right.——A day was profitably spent in the beautiful little city of Prescott. This is a distributing center for a great mining district. It is the home of 5,000 American citizens. This "city a mile high" is coming to enjoy a good reputation on account of its good climate. Having no other source of information, the pastor of the largest Protestant church was called upon. He supposed there were as many as twenty "Christians" who had become identified with his church. He gave me to understand that the town was already "overchurched" and somewhat nervously inquired as to the object of my visit. By his courtesy I "got scent" of "fresh tracks" of my "game," and in the course of the afternoon I had "bagged" several choice specimens of the germ "Christian only." The county superintendent of schools and wife are of the good old Kentucky brand of Disciples; the leading physician and his wife, and her father and mother: the assistant cashier of the bank and his wife; the bookkeeper of a great retail and wholesale firm; the head of an assay office and mining engineer, family of merchant and others might be named. While these people wish for a church of their own faith and order, they hesitate to venture, and are even becoming inoculated with the notion that the town is already "overchurched." Now such a condition is possible, but the impression a stranger gets is decidedly otherwise. The town is under-churched and over-salooned. The fact is that the very conditions existing at Prescott are the grounds that warrant the Disciples entering the field. When four weak, ineffective Protestant organizations can scarcely maintain themselves in a community of 5,000 Americans, it shows something radically faulty with the position, method, or spirit of the church. What is coming to be recognized as the fundamental weakness of Protestantism is to be observed as under microscope in a western town. When will God's church learn that to maintain rival denominations, or seek to group the Lord's disciples about any other principle or name than faith in and loyalty to him is an act of treason to the kingdom? Scarcely a conversion is reported from the churches of Prescott this year. This of itself would justify the Disciples in entering the town. The churches already there need the leavening power of our presence to inspire them with the spirit of burning loyalty to Christ and zealous evangelism for souls. With a good evangelist for a lever, with the following we already have there as a fulcrum, the Disciples can move mightily the unchurched multitudes in Prescott.

Arizona must be evangelized.

Grant K. Lewis,
Tempe, Ariz. Secretary.

Texas.

The late lectureship, held at Palestine November 19-22, was one of the most delightful ever held in Texas. For harmony and good fellowship, it was complete. The papers given were all of very high order. Dr. Hall Calhoun, of Kentucky University, was the chief lecturer. He is scholarly, a very fine speaker. I mean by that he is distinct in his enunciation, clearly understood by all and, without trimmings and trappings, tells in a modest way of the subjects to which he has given deep thought and careful research. While announcing himself as conservative, we found him broad-minded, sweet-spirited, and giving evidence that he understood that there is more beyond. Dr. Clinton Lockhart's address on "Evangelism" was perhaps the most eloquent. Ellsworth Faris gave us a very thoughtful address on the "Immanence of God." This address brought out some discussion, but all in the best spirit. J. B. Holmes, of Beaumont, gave us a strong and timely address on the subject of the "Divorce Evil." This address should indeed have a wide reading. A. E. Dubber, of Fort Worth, gave us a tender address on the "Risen Life." But time will forbid my mentioning each of the addresses. Not one fell below a high average. The next lectureship goes to Abilene, the geographical center of Texas. It was a pleasure to the writer to meet with and preach to these brethren on the Sunday preceding the lectureship, since Palestine was the last church I served as pastor. L. D. Anderson, the present minister, is doing an excellent work there, and is popular with the entire city. The brethren have recently completed the best church building in Palestine, and the outlook they have is very bright, indeed.

W. A. Boggess, one of our state evangelists, is in a fine meeting at Huntsville, with Mrs. M. R. Cox as singing evangelist. Some 25 persons have been added and the "end is not yet." Spicer and Douthitt are aiding T. F. Weaver at Port Arthur in a missionary meeting. Some 30 additions have been reported and it is believed that within a few months this new church, in an important and growing city, will dwell in its own house and become self-sustaining.

Our summer and fall campaign, as will be noted by our semi-annual report, has been the most successful ever made in Texas. More churches have responded to the November offering than ever before in this state, the receipts up to December 7 being fully 25 per cent above that of any prior November offering. Texas is receiving some excellent men from other states; one of the latest is W. J. Battenfield, of Illinois, who locates with the church at Beeville. A. J. Chowning, of Oklahoma, will probably locate at Blooming Grove. J. J. Morgan, of Kansas City, is with the First Church at Fort Worth. Charles Lockhart is leading the Central at Waco, W. R. Montgomery is at Belton, W. H. Winters at Orange, Brother Horne at Midland. S. W. Jackson is the Panhandle district evangelist and William Monday is at work as the Northwest Texas evangelist. There are still others whose names do not occur to me just now, but we are receiving a number of first-class men. We need still others, but they must be men who can work for $50 to $75 per month, and who will be willing to serve two or more churches. Let any one applying for work write me with the first letter about the amount of salary he can work for, whether or not he is willing to take more than one church, and send commendation from your home church and state secretary. To observe these rules will save unnecessary correspondence.

Denver, Colo.

The Central, the mother church of Denver and Colorado, is now a downtown church and only a block from the Brown Palace Hotel. The new $250,000 Y. M. C. A. building is in process of construction just across the street. Our auditorium is one of the most attractive in the city and our music and order of services in harmony with Christian devotion and culture. The church is renewing its youth. In the past two years the Bible school has grown from 150 to 400. A class of young people of both sexes enrolls 150. There are no other classes to match these in Colorado.——We start a simultaneous evangelistic campaign January 6. All our churches are doing well. No man in the city is more popular and beloved than B. B. Tyler. J. E. Pickett has done heroic work in North Denver. The Berkeley church plans continued progress when their new pastor comes. Brother Haston is bringing the East Side church into line.——The love that Mrs. Craig had everywhere elicited has manifested itself in every gracious way. Love inspires to right words and deeds. Her memory is inspiring us all to greater Christian devotion and service. I am grateful to the host of friends who have written in loving sympathy. Christian faith is sustained and comforted beyond the power of words to tell. The motive and inclination inciting to Christian preaching and work are stronger than ever, but loneliness oppresses. I began this work in Denver twenty-five years ago and the result, while not what it might be, is cause for thanksgiving. Our aim is to have Denver share in the great victories in city work. We have recently reorganized a Denver union of our churches on Kansas City lines.

A New Church at Helena, Ark.

My wife and I are just now returning to Louisiana from Helena, Ark., where we closed a short meeting, resulting in the organization of a new church, and the buying of a lot for $1,050 cash. Helena is a town of 10,000 people, 3,000 being whites. Helena is at the upper edge of the greatest hard wood country now known to me. When the hard wood is removed this region will be as fertile as any section of the Mississippi swamp. Traveling over the "Vinegar Central" railroad just built through this vast undeveloped region we went eighty-two miles without passing a town with more than one store in it. Helena lies at the upper end of this vast region of undeveloped wealth. It is to be a great river city. Edgar Graham, of Louisville, Ky., moved to Helena about two years ago and began to hold communion services with whoever would come out in a justice of the peace's office. He finally wrote to W. J. Wright and Brother Wright sent us from Louisiana up to Helena and told us to do what we could in the short time we had to work and the A. C. M. S. would stand for half the expense. We could only get an upstairs hall at first, and after that an old store down stairs for our services. We organized, secured the best available lot, and prepared for a meeting next May which will be called the "house building meeting."

Minor J. Ross, a Virginian by birth, a graduate of Milligan College, and also of the college of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., who has preached acceptably in Kentucky for some years, begins work in the Harrisonburg, Va., field the second Sunday of 1907.——H. D. Coffey, in the employment of V. C. M. S., has held a meeting in East Bristol, organizing a new congregation with 120 members, only 19 of whom had been members of the first church, Bristol; 25 others made the confession, some of whom will unite with this congregation.——The enlarged house at Manchester has been opened, the dedication to be in January.——The new church at Blackstone is at last ready; the present need is a preacher for this good field.——The Roanoke congregation has just purchased a church property in the northwest unchurched section of the city, where there is promise of rapid growth for this third church.——The new building at Petersburg, seating 500 people was formally opened for service December 2.

A New Building in the Philippines.

Yesterday, September 9, we dedicated the chapel built in Laoag, Philippines, by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. A storm rendered it impossible for the missionary in Vigan, Hermon P. Williams, to be present and deliver the Spanish sermon. Three successful meetings were held. In the morning more than five hundred persons were present, among whom were provincial and municipal officials, members of the bar and priests of the Aglipayano church. Good attention was given to the discourse preached in Ilocano by W. H. Hanna on "The Uses of a Chapel." Many remained for the Lord's supper and witnessed for the first time that which has been altered into a sacrifice for the sins of the living and dead by the Romish church.

In spite of the rain which came at the hour of the afternoon service the seats were well filled by American teachers, pupils of the high school and intermediate school and residents of Laoag. Dr. C. L. Pickett preached a fine sermon on "Christ, the Centre." Brother Will Jessup, of the auditing department of the Philippines, assisted at the service.

At night the Stygian darkness did not keep the people away. Three native preachers delivered short addresses and your reporter let down the Gospel net. Three men made confession—a Spaniard, a native opium-smoker and an old man. Two of these were baptized the same hour of the night. So a glorious close was given to the inauguration day. Mrs. Hanna presided at the organ and Mrs. Pickett assisted in special music. Dr. Pickett's Bible school class of high school boys sang "Wonderful Story of Love."

The chapel is neatly and substantially built of Oregon pine, rests on posts of molave, has a tower, dressing-rooms and baptistry, galvanized iron roof and is painted in two shades of green. The sides are wainscoted and the ceiling and walls are lined with woven bamboo or suali. The principal timbers have been painted with a preparation called carbolineum, so they will not become a prey to white ants, which are almost the supreme pest of our province. The building is much admired by all who enter or pass by, and is accepted by the Ilocanos as an evidence that American Christians love them and have a deep interest in their eternal welfare. We are hopeful that with the opening of this chapel will come enlargement of the missionary interests in all our province. The native congregation purchased (with some outside help) a fine twenty-eight-inch bell to call people to worship. The members have very small possessions and are strangers to free-will giving for religious purposes, but this example of American liberality will surely inspire them to assist the congregations in nearby towns in the erection of houses of worship.

Oriental Missions.

San Francisco.—Dr. L. H. Dott, a Chinese medical graduate of seven years' standing, has been engaged to take charge of the medical work here. At first he will practice in Oakland, just across the bay, where most—some 12,000—of the Chinese now reside. He will thus establish our reputation and make friends. Later he will work in the hospital in San Francisco. Great difficulty is being experienced in securing the lot for the hospital, largely on account of high prices. We need $5,000 more than we have. Would that some good brother or sister might supply this amount to the C. W. B. M. There is a great future for the medical work among the Chinese and Japanese. It is a crying need. It will be blessed.

Berkeley.—The Japanese night school is flourishing. The volunteer corps of teachers is doing a truly missionary work and deserve all praise. The Japanese have made formal application to our board to take over all forms of work among them. This is an unusual opportunity, and ought to be embraced.

Portland and Los Angeles.—Plans are being laid in both these cities for an enlarged work among Chinese and Japanese. It may take the form of medical ministrations, and associated evangelistic and educational efforts.

Lectures.—A course of lectures on Missions is being given to the students of the seminaries in Berkeley.

Addresses.—At least six "C. W. B. M. Day" addresses will be given this year. Richmond and Sacramento have already been visited. The churches at Berkeley and Oakland will be addressed next Lord's day, and Santa Rosa and Napa, later.

Our Only Church in Utah.

Salt Lake is a beautiful city, and destined in this respect to be the Washington of the West. Mormonism has reached its zenith, and is now about 3 o'clock toward sunset. Non-Mormons control the city, and will soon dominate the county, and could now, if they would agree. . The writer has been supplying the pulpit of the Central Christian Church for six months, and found one of the very best churches of over 200 members in the brotherhood. In church attendance, liberality, loyalty to the minister, zeal and good Christian sense, they are as good as anybody I know of. There have been additions nearly every Sunday. They keep up their finances well, the church has all the modern conveniences. That valuable and good man, B. F. Clay, and his wife deserve great praise for this organization ond building. The church has had men of ability from the first—the zealous W. H. Bagby, eloquent T. H. Pinkerton and the consecrated W. M. Taylor, the latter for only five months. I must be leaving soon. I only promised to stay three months, but their kind entreaties have kept me. They are looking for the right preacher, but have not found him yet. Inquiries should address J. G. Campbell, Monarch Hardware Co., Salt Lake City. It is no harder for us to work and get fine results here than anywhere else. A strong, able, energetic preacher is the need, a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and wisdom will find here one of the greatest and most inviting fields in the United States.

W. Ross Lloyd.

[Since writing the above Brother Lloyd has gone to Lexington, Ky. We presume the pulpit is still open, as we have had no further advice.—Editor.]

India Notes.

Brother Wharton and his wife came to India in the year 1882, in company with Albert Norton, and Misses Graybiel, Kinsey, Boyd and Kingsbury. Of this group Brother Wharton is the first to pass from this life. Mr. Norton is now in another mission, but at the time of writing none of the others named are in India. Miss Kingsbury is expected on the 16th of this month, Misses Boyd and Graybiel are on furlough at home, Mrs. Wharton is with her children at home, and Miss Kinsey, now Mrs. Mitchell, is also in America. The party of missionaries first went to Harda in 1883. From that time until his return to America in 1899, with the exception of a short time spent in Bilaspur, Brother Wharton's missionary home was Harda. While never strong since his return to the field in 1904, he entered into all the work and its plans and expressed great regret when it was impossible to do what he wanted to do. The one work which was upon Brother Wharton's heart more than any other was the Bible college for the preparation of preachers. He began a work of this kind before he went to America in 1899. Before returning in 1904 he canvassed the country for funds for this work. Thousands will remember his speeches in behalf of this work. Since his return he has been connected with it at Jubbulpore.

Another of our missionaries, Dr. Anna Gordon, of Mungeli, is seriously ill. She was attacked with what was pronounced appendicitis in an acute form. Though there was no doctor within thirty miles she passed through the crisis, but an operation was decided upon. She has since gone to Bombay for that purpose, but the results are not yet known.

Several others have been ill. Brother Davis, of Mandla, has been having a hard time with fever. So have Misses Pope and Drake. Miss Mills has had a severe attack of measles. Having had the disease once before she was considered immune, but the measles of India is no respector of immunes and frequently attacks for a second or even a third time.

There have lately been four baptisms in Harda and three in Rath. Most of these—five I think—were converts from heathenism. We have just had a joint convention of Christian Endeavor, Sunday-school and Epworth League workers in Jubbulpore. Our mission is the most prominent in the central provinces in the first two lines of work. It was all held in the vernacular. About 100 native brothers and sisters were present at the sessions. They were profitable to all present. Seventeen boys walked over from Damoh, representing that society, preaching the gospel in the villages along the route of 266 miles, and camping at night along the roadside.

Our Bible college has now twenty-one students in it. The new building is being erected, and it is hoped to dedicate it in March. What friend of missions wishes to be present at the dedication? Send your name and we shall be most happy to entertain you.

South Dakota.

Though there is but little from the Dakotas in the papers, there is a number of quiet, consecrated workers whose work shall come to light in the future. We get some help from the American Christian Missionary Society and some from the National C. W. B. M. We hope to have a state evangelist at work soon. He will devote some time in North Dakota since the A. C. M. S. has made a small appropriation to be used in that state under the direction of our South Dakota board.——Ellendale, N. D., is the only field in that state where a pastor is located and a small amount of assistance will be rendered there. Fargo, Mandan, Gladstone and other points need help and encouragement. Calls are coming in daily from all over South Dakota for meetings and assistance in pastoral support. It is doubtful if the Disciples throughout the country have yet realized the open door in the Dakotas—the vast extent and developing wealth of the country. It would be almost impossible to plant a sectarian type of Disciples in this soil for they have not so much as heard whether there be such a thing as anti-ism, to say nothing of a much worse thing—a standard of orthodoxy set up in an editorial sanctum. Men of faith and vision should come this way, not to defend the faith or word, but to preach the Gospel of life.

The Christian-Evangelist, like old wine, grows richer with age and may God use her Editors many years to come. Other national papers come, too, and we love them all, like we do our boys who sometimes scrap in the church yard. A redeeming feature is, that our people generally read only those pointed briefs which concern the progress of the kingdom and care but little as to the length of beard requisite to the eldership.

The church at Sioux Falls burned their mortgage on November 17 and the writer regrets that he could not be there to speak as expected.——The church at Carthage where J. H. Reeves labors, will dedicate their new house of worship within a few weeks. The church at Presho is also building. Since locating at Aberdeen, April 1, there have been some improvements. A new parsonage with modern equipments has been built and every dollar subscribed paid. Some improvements have been made on the church property in way of furnace, etc. Within the past few weeks five have been added by letter and others coming. The work is difficult, but our people are liberal and those who work at all are faithful. Aberdeen now has nine departures by rail and the building enterprise has not yet closed for winter. To-day at our ministerial association Rev. C. Knoll, who was a student under Professor Harnack at Berlin, gave a paper on the noted scholar.

OBITUARIES.

[Notices of Deaths, not more than four lines, inserted free. Obituary memoirs, one cent per word. Send the money with the copy.]

WILLIAM FRAZIER

was born in Shelby county, Ky., September 23, 1828. At the age of 9 years he came with his father to Lincoln county, Mo., who settled near New Hope. The most of Elder Frazier's life service has been spent in Lincoln county, except sixteen years in Colusa, Cal., and two years in Iowa. His father died when William was 15 years old and for many years the care of the family fell upon him. He confessed his faith in his divine Lord and Savior under the preaching of Elder Joseph Errett at New Hope and presented himself to Brother Errett for baptism, saying: "See, here is water what doth hinder me to be baptized?" and was "buried with his Lord by baptism," and received into the fellowship of the church at New Hope. Early in his Christian life he was set apart to the office of elder in the Church of Christ and he served the church in that capacity most conscientiously and faithfully.

Brother Frazier was united in marriage to Orpha Virginia Cash, nee Brown, on November 16, 1873, and his death occurred on the thirty-third anniversary of this marriage, falling sweetly asleep in Jesus at 3:30 p. m. on November 16, 1906.

The funeral was held in the church of which Brother Frazier was a much beloved elder for many years, on Saturday, November 17, at 2 p. m. The house was full of sympathizing friends. Rev. B. D. Kennedy, pastor of the Troy Presbyterian Church, offered a memorial tribute followed by the pastor of the church, after which a short sermon was preached by the pastor, Elder E. G. Merrill, from Isa. 40:6. The body was then laid to rest in the Troy cemetery.

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."—E. G. Merrill, pastor of the Christian Church, Troy, Mo.

QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS

BY S. D. GORDON

The author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer" (now in its 55th thousand), and "Quiet Talks on Power" (now in its 80th thousand).

Cloth, 12mo. 288 pages. Net 75c.

"QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS" is an attempt to group up in simplest Anglo-Saxon English the statements of the entire Bible regarding Jesus. The purpose is wholly practical, that one may get at a glance, for his own thought and heart, the swing of the Bible from end to end on its central theme.

Mr. Gordon's life work has been leading up to the theme of this new book.

TOPICAL ARRANGEMENT

FIRST—The purpose of Jesus' coming; the plan of his coming; the tragic break that occurred in the plan, the surprises that worked out of that break.

SECOND—The Person of Jesus from three points of view: the human; the divine; the winsomeness of his personality.

THIRD—The seven great outstanding experiences which reveal Jesus: the Jordan Baptism; the Wilderness Temptation: the Transfiguration as an emergency unusual; the Gethsemane struggle; the Victory of Calvary.

FOURTH—Study Notes. One of the most important features of the book, making it possible for the earnest reader to follow for himself Mr. Gordon's essential methods.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

December 26, 1906.

The Christmas Group.—Luke 2:1-16.

The Babe of Bethlehem.

"Behold the Child of Promise!
Behold the new-born King!
To-day his glorious advent
Let every creature sing.
Around his manger-cradle
Adorning bend the knee;
For though his birth is humble,
There's none so great as he.

"He comes to lift the burden
From every soul oppressed;
To heal the broken-hearted,
And give the weary rest;
He comes the world to ransom,
And set its captives free;
He comes, the Lord anointed—
There's none so great as he."

Have we rendered unto the Lord according to all his benefits during the year whose sands are nearly run? In giving unto the poor we are committing unto the Lord that which he will return to us, before another Christmas, in large measures, pressed down and running over.

We never will know the full significance of the Savior's coming until with eyes not of flesh, we behold the appointments of our heavenly home in the Father's house of many mansions. The angels never can know all because subject to limitations from which the sons of God are exempt, but they knew enough to sing joy to all of earth who would be redeemed by the blood of the cross.

The angels sang peace the first Christmas, let us pray and make for peace this Christmastide. It is true Christ has made impossible another "Thirty Years War," or Napoleonic era, but still kings are more interested in drilling soldiers than husbandmen, and general disarmament can not be secured. Let us help the sentiments of peace among the nations, between religious cults, communities, families, around all hearthstones, and particularly between ourselves and God.

The coming of the wise men to Joseph's humble home was not so much a miracle as an accentuation of the universal quest for God and the instinct guiding men to him. That intuition has impelled millions to pagan fane and temple, the Greeks to an image of "The Unknown God," Socrates to nobler conceptions of God, and "the wise men of the east" to the Savior's cradle. It is impelling the world Godward to-day. This comment must not disparage miracles, but if "the wise men's" coming was "miraculous," the day of miracles is not ended.

Doubts concerning the Nativity do not relate to whether God could introduce the Prince of Glory to the world through Judean peasantry, but to whether he would. If the effect will justify it, God, who controls all causes, will withhold none. If for one hour we look over the brink down into the world of ruin into which the incorrigible have fled from the serene light of heaven and listen to the wailing over wasted opportunities, we will all agree that the coming of the Son of Man would have been justified if only one soul had been saved. Students of human nature will tell us that his manner of coming and living was the one best adapted to his accomplishing the work the Father gave him to do.

When Jehovah sought a mother for his holy Child he did not pass Mary by on the other side because she was a poor peasant girl, nor was that estate the reason for her selection. To her was given the highest honor ever conferred on mortal because she was heavenly minded and the noblest response the world contained to God's overtures for man's return to the original design of the race. And to-day he goes neither to palaces nor cottages in quest of a medium through which to work wonders of grace, but where character is resplendent with the virtues. Station, wealth, heredity and other considerations that the world may highly prize are merely incidental, and not at all determining in the bestowal of divine honors.

Memory verse, Psa. 90:12.

Golden Text.—His name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.—Isa. 9:6.

The lessons of this quarter cover a period of only a few days, but the most important few days in the history of the world. Beginning on Tuesday of Passion Week, three days before the crucifixion, we trace the course of Jesus in his last days with his disciples, his warnings and blessings and exhortations to them, the last touches in their three years course of training; the last conflicts between the pettiness of scribes and Pharisees and the breadth and depth of the Master's wisdom; the base and cowardly plot of the chief priests and their illegal procedure in carrying it out; the weakness and cowardice of the Roman governor in abdicating in favor of a mob and delivering to death a prisoner whom he had acquitted; the dark hour of the crucifixion; the glad day of the resurrection; and finally the triumphant ending of the Savior's earthly career in the ascension.

The effect of these closing events of the life of Jesus upon the disciples indicates at least one reason why the Christ must die. In no other way than by his death could their minds have been so completely cleared of every thought of a material kingdom. In no other way than by his resurrection could they have gained the assurance that they had a living Lord, still potent in the world though not visible in it, who was the head of a spiritual and eternal kingdom to which they were all heirs. The price, great as it was, was not too much for such a conviction, not only in the minds of the disciples but perpetuated in the world as a transforming power in the lives of men.

If one is interested in the religious redemption of but a small part of earth, it is evidence of his heavenly inheritance being co-extensive with but a small portion of the eternal ages. God's plans for men and worlds have rather to do with spheres than segments. We must be lovers and Saviors of the whole round world, of which India is a part.

"Now, o'er the waters,
Burns the crimson after glow,
From a hundred temples
Fades the day so slow;
Where the palm tree rises,
Telling of a foreign strand,
Turn our hearts in sorrow
For this stranger land.
India, sad India,
Let the dead years speak no more.
India, sad India,
Open now thy door."

There is a Christian's peace that passeth all understanding that the world can neither give nor take away, but there is also a divine discontent in the hearts of true Christians that gives no rest until the utmost is done to make known to those living in benighted regions God, the Father, Holy Spirit, the Comforter, and Jesus, the "friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

While William Carey was apprenticed to a cobbler a fellow workman effected his conversion. The name of his obscure mentor is not now known to man, but it certainly is to the angels, and to him will accrue in heaven no small part of the glory and honor won by his great protege who translated the Bible into twenty-four languages and dialects and gave the Scriptures to 300,000,000 men and women.

Though very poor, William Carey was a great student and mastered Latin, Greek, Hebrew, French and German. In India he finally became professor of Indian languages at Fort William College at Calcutta. His salary was $7,500 per annum. It is said that himself and family lived on $200 a year and gave the rest to missions. One-tenth for missions is more than most of us can bear, but this over-soul rejoiced in the self denial that enabled him to give nine-tenths to far-away evangelization.

In the eighteenth century were born Washington, Franklin, Napoleon and others whose names are pre-eminent in war and statecraft, art and science, but none of them so mightily affected this world and the one to come as has William Carey, the son of a Paulerspury (England) weaver, born August 17, 1761. Through his consecration to the redemption of India, not only has that sad land been lifted up into the sunshine of hope and joy, but inspiration has been given to heroes and martyrs to endue other continents and islands of the sea with the glorious privileges of Christian civilization. His is a name that ought not to die and which the ages will never permit to die, and chanting hosts around the great white throne will blend it in their ascriptions of praises to Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

One of the goals toward which Carey pressed his way in India was the overthrow of the pagan institution of the "Suttee," which required the incineration of widows on the funeral pyre of their husbands. In 1829 the English government declared all priests and others engaged in this institution should be held guilty of murder. It is said Carey was gowned for his Sunday sermon when the carrier brought him the decree for translation. Recognizing the significance of the manuscript, he removed his ministerial garb and entered immediately upon the work of translation in the hope that his haste might save some from the cruel "Suttee." This was characteristic. Neither considerations of personal ease or established forms or precedents would deter him from doing what he could for the greatest good to the greatest number.

People's Forum

Brother Garrison on Inspiration.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Having read with interest and some degree of profit your book entitled "The Holy Spirit," especial attention was given to the chapter on the "Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures;" and I find some questions forcing themselves into my thinking which I am very anxious to set before you.

Before formulating these questions permit me to say that I am disappointed at the attitude you have taken toward the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. Your treatment is remarkable for a lack of Scripture quotations, and therefore unsupported by the Word of God. You have not set before your readers the Bible facts in the case.

You say the sacred writers distinctly claim inspiration for their writings and you have used the familiar formula, "The word of the Lord came to," to prove that fact. There are others, such as "The Word of the Lord came to Jeremiah," "The Word that the Lord spake against Babylon," and again, "I heard a voice of one that spake unto me, saying, Son of man stand upon thy feet and I will speak unto thee." (Ezek. 1:28 and 2:1.) In the face of these quotations from Jeremiah and Ezekiel, you say, "the prophets were under and simply conscious of a divine impulse moving them to write or speak." You ignore the idea of verbal inspiration of the Scriptures as taught in the formulae quoted, and heartily endorse and promulgate the "dynamic theory" as you are pleased to call it, because you do not know "a single great thinker in the church of to-day who holds the verbal or mechanical theory."

Brother Garrison, in this you may be correct—the verbal theory may be without such advocates, but there are others who do some thinking and can not be satisfied with your disposition of the question. We crave satisfaction on this question of inspiration, and we are anxious to know if the prophets and apostles were any more inspired than Shakespeare, Bacon, Macauley and others? We may claim these men had a divine impulse for their messages to the age in which they lived. How can we think without words or intelligible signs? Has the Lord spoken to men by the use of intelligible speech? Did he speak to Moses and Israel from Mount Sinai? Did he speak to John the Baptist and the disciples at Jordan and on the Mount of Transfiguration and declare, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased"? Is it not possible for God to speak through men without destroying their individuality? Has he not done so? He surely could do so and violate no law of reason, and these men would not necessarily be considered "mere parrots" in the sight of their fellow-men, as they voiced the messages of the Almighty rather than unintelligible impulses. How are we to understand the address of Jesus to the disciples? He tells them, "They shall deliver you up; take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall say, for it is not ye that speak, but the spirit of your Father which speaks in you." (Matt. 20:19-20.)

Again, how are we to understand the apostles speaking on the day of Pentecost, in languages they had never learned of nations assembled at Jerusalem? Representatives of every nation under heaven at that time were there. More nations were represented than there were apostles, and still they heard them speak, every man in his own tongue in which he was born. The apostles spake the wonderful works of God. Who enabled them so to speak? If the men had nothing more than a divine impulse or sudden feeling, here is a marvelous thing! The Holy Spirit took of the things of Jesus and revealed them unto the apostles and the apostles to the people—a people whose speech they had never learned. The same is true of Cornelius and those who were with him when Peter came to instruct them in the way of life. The twelve Ephesians also,

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Cost Nothing to Try, Send for it and See.

Those who suffer from it well know the miseries of catarrh. There is no need of it. Why not get it cured? It can be done. The remedy that does this is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, an eminent Southern doctor and minister, who has for over thirty-two years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its worst forms.

He will send you, entirely free, enough to satisfy you that it is a real, genuine, "home cure" for catarrh, scratchy throat, stopped up feeling in the nose and throat, that clears out the head, nose, throat and catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, asthma, etc.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before. It is not a spray, douche, atomizer, salve, cream or any such thing, but a genuine, tried-and-true cure, lungs, so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choking, spitting feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It saves the wear-and-tear of internal medicines which ruin the stomach. It will heal up the diseased membranes and thus prevent colds, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and a good, free trial treatment and also a beautiful illustrated booklet, "How I Cure Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, showing you how you can cure yourself privately at home.

whom Paul baptized and upon whom he laid his hands that they might receive the Holy Ghost, "spake with tongues and prophesied." The Holy Spirit came upon them in a miraculous way and they spake with tongues and glorified God. The miracle was in the speech of the apostles and not in the hearing of the multitude. Paul, in Corinthians, speaks of "the gift of tongues" and "thanked God he spake with tongues more than they all." Is not this more than a divine impulse unexpressed? Again you say (page 39), "The theory, for instance, that has no room for the fact of minor errors in matters of detail and genealogical dates, is too narrow for facts that are well known to every intelligent Bible student." Here, it seems to me, is a positive reflection on the intelligence of all who accept the verbal inspiration of the Scriptures. Is it to be inferred that narrowness and weakness are in the position of those who believe the messages of our Lord came to those who uttered them in well worded and well rounded sentences? If verbal errors there are and some incorrect genealogical dates, may they not have crept into the text in the work of transcribing the Scriptures? However, these errors, or apparent errors, by no means interfere with the sense and truth of the message and may yet be reasonably accounted for.

Your attempt, by seemingly a very weak argument, to support the so-called "dynamic theory" of inspiration is set forth as follows: "The man who does not see more of the Holy Spirit in the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians than in a chapter of the imprecatory Psalms is perhaps the unfortunate victim of a theory which prevents him from so doing." Is it reasonable to suppose that inspiration depends upon the degrees of truth revealed? Did it not require as much inspiration for Moses to say, "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me, Him shall ye hear in all things," as it did for Isaiah to say, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder and his name shall be called, Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace," and also describe his sufferings and death?

You grant that the men who wrote "were to some degree inspired, or under partial control of the Divine Guide, which would assure substantial accuracy of the inspired record and thereby furnish an infallible guide to one seeking the way of salvation." You could not have said much less than this, with any reasonable expectation that your treatment of the subject would find any sympathy and acceptance by your readers. The apostles in many ways were fallible men, and as you teach, "under a partial divine impulse," how can any reasonable man expect infallibility from such a source? How are we to determine that they correctly worded that partial divine impulse or sudden feeling? How do we know that the partial divine impulse was revealed at all? Luke writes to Theophilus that he might know the certainty of those things wherein he had been instructed. The apostles no doubt voiced the mind of God and Christ in the very language of the Holy Spirit.

Dear Brother, there are some things in your treatment of the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures that are hard to be understood which the unlearned may wrest to their own confusion as they do other Scriptures. R. W. STEVENSON.

[The best reply we could make to the foregoing criticism would be to have our readers turn to the chapter of our work on "The Holy Spirit," entitled "Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures," and give it a careful reading. We could wish that Brother Stevenson might do the same. We append a few remarks:

1. Brother Stevenson complains that we did not quote all the passages claiming inspiration for the Bible. Certainly not. We quoted enough, however, to show that the Scriptures do claim inspiration for themselves. That was the point aimed at.

2. Our critic says "Is it reasonable to suppose that an inspiration depends upon the degree of truth revealed?" It is quite reasonable to suppose that more inspiration was needed for writing the 13th chapter of 1 Corinthians than one of the imprecatory psalms, or some purely historical record. This was our contention, aimed against the dead-level idea of revelation.

3. Our correspondent inadvertently puts into quotation marks statements which we did not make, which is a great injustice to any writer. Thus the words quoted as if from the chapter criticised—"Were to some degree inspired or under partial control of the divine Guide," etc.—are not our words, but our critic's. There are other inaccurate quotations.

4. In discarding the mechanical theory of inspiration which holds that the Bible writers were only amanuenses of the Holy Spirit, we distinctly stated: "Nor can any theory of inspiration which has in it no room for occasional direct communications from God of certain facts and words, be considered broad enough for all the facts. For such communications there seem to have been." ("The Holy Spirit," page 40). This statement is completely ignored by the article in which we are asked whether or not certain words were not communicated on certain occasions, as if our view took no note of that fact.

5. Again our critic says: "We are anxious to know if the prophets and apostles were any more inspired than Shakespeare, Bacon, Macaulay, and others?" And this in the face of our statement in the very chapter criticised, as follows: "Nor is that theory broad enough to meet all the facts which limits the degree of inspiration of the Bible writers to that possessed by other men of great talent and genius. There are characteristics about the Scriptures not to be accounted for without the presence of a superhuman agency." ("The Holy Spirit," page 40).

6. Again Brother Stevenson cites passages where the "gift of tongues" is mentioned, as instances where men spoke in languages intelligible to others, which they had never learned. A careful study of the New Testament, especially of 1 Corinthians, the 14th chapter, would show our brother that this is not the meaning of the "gift of tongues," which is speaking in ecstatic language. The case of Pentecost seems different.

7. Finally our brother says, "There are some things in your treatment of the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures that are hard to be understood which the unlearned may wrest to their own confusion as they do other Scriptures." This is not a serious charge, seeing it is one which Peter made against the writings of Paul; but notice that Paul's writings were wrested, that is, distorted from their true meaning, intent, and application, by the unlearned to their own confusion.

The chapter criticised was an effort to emphasize the fact of inspiration, and to vindicate it from certain false theories, which have caused many to reject the fact, and we have had many testimonials of help in this direction from this chapter.—EDITOR.]

A CHRISTMAS GIFT

By FRANK H. SWEET

So long the road was up the hill,
Beyond the town, beyond the mill,
That few in summer took that way;
But when the winter snows came down
Upon the hills beyond the town,
None passed the door of Peter Shay.

A low, gray house, whose scanty cheer
Grew scantier with each passing year;
So hard and homely was his lot,
So little had his heart to hold,
His life before its time grew old;
He seemed by all his kind forgot.

Close by the busy village street,
The pastor sat with question meet
Of work to bring the Master gain.
His head was bowed, but not with years;
His eyes but clearer were for tears;
His heart was richer for its pain.

"Show me, dear Lord, a lamb to feed,"
So prayed he, "'tis the shepherd's need;
Or tempted feet that go astray!"
He rose, and led by circumstance,
Went where by providential chance
He heard the name of Peter Shay.

He slept and woke; the Christmas light
Lay in his chamber still and bright;
"Give me," he cried, "a gift, O Christ!
A soul for thy dear love to win
Out of its sorrow and its sin,
A gift of love and joy unpriced!"

The midday found him on the hill,
Where snow untracked lay drear and chill,
And knocking at the lonely door;
Welcomed with wonder as a guest,
He entered where no feet had pressed
With Christmas message e'er before.

And now what words of Christly cheer
Greeted the unaccustomed ear:
With human sympathy addressed,
The old, sweet story, newly told,
Was sweeter for the dark and cold
That gloomed around the hillside nest.

The stranger passed, but on the air
Lingered the fragrance of his prayer
"As if an angel shook his wings."
So beautiful on hills of God
Are feet that bear through earthly road
Glad tidings of the heavenly things.

The days wore on till spring was brown
Upon the hills beyond the town,
And green in warmer valleys lay;
When in the house of God was seen,
In true right mind and heart I ween,
The form and face of Peter Shay.

Eyes questioned wondering eyes to tell
What hap of change or chance befell
That drew him to the holy place:
But he who led with reverent air
The worshippers in praise and prayer,
Gave thanks for gift of Christly grace.

Waynesboro, Va.

Where Christ was Born.

BY JEAN K. BAIRD.

The First Place.

The night was oppressively hot, even for a Judean night. The breeze had shifted from the direction of the sea, and now came from the rocky desert places of the southeast. But for the most part, the air was still, so still that not a leaf upon the olive trees at the foot of the hills moved. The moon looked like a great cart-wheel of silver suspended upon high.

Nathan could not rest within doors. The air was heavy in the sleeping-room. There were so many little bodies to fill up the space in the house. He looked upon his sleeping brothers, Reuben, Levi, Benjamin—a whole half dozen, all bearing the good orthodox names of the Israelites. No drop of the blood of mixed races was in their veins. Nathan was proud that this was so. There was nothing so fine in all this wide world as being a Hebrew—to be the chosen ones of the Lord.

His mind dwelt much on such matters. He was a dreamer. He would sit for hours to listen to the history and legends of his people. The boys of his age jeered at his taking no part in their play or work. His brothers laughed, declaring that Nathan was as old as Eleazar, who lived out from the town, and who was so old that he could not see or hear, nor could he eat meat, having no teeth to tear it. He sat all day and mumbled. Surely Nathan was as old as he.

At this, the mother had patted his dark curly hair, telling them to hold their tongues; Nathan, perhaps, might be chosen for greater things. She had thoughts of the Temple service in her mind. She was ambitious for Nathan.

Now, he slipped away from his sleeping brothers. Going out into the moonlight, he picked his way to the sloping hillside, throwing himself down, his clasped hands under his head, his face upturned to the sky. The blue dome was covered with stars, steady, clear, looking down upon him. Far in the distance were the olive-covered hills about Brook Kedron. Their shadows were black lines in the moonlight.

Judean nights are quiet, but this night was more than that. A great calm pervaded all space. Nature was not asleep, but hushed into an awesome silence. Some mighty presence had its finger-tips upon the lips of all living things.

Nathan felt the spell. He was uplifted in spirit. He raised his eyes from the distant landscape to fix them again upon the heavens. A feeling of exultation awoke within him. To his people had the promise been given that they should be as the stars; and the promise had been fulfilled. He knew how many millions had come back from Egypt. His heart was sore because of their separation, and their wrong-doings. He grieved that they had been blind; that they had not seen what had weakened them.

His people suffered now. Some had crossed the seas into other lands. All was not well with them. But the time was coming when this would pass. He knew the prophecy. The Lord had promised to send a king to them. All other prophecies and promises had been fulfilled within their time, and why not this? He hoped the King would come in his time! His heart throbbed at the thought of that great One who would rule the Israelites! How he would serve him! The meanest, most servile place in the King's service would he his honor. Yet when this came to fulfilment he, Nathan, might be an old, old man, blind, deaf, and mumbling like Eleazar, who lived out on the road from Bethany.

"But even then, even then," he whispered to himself, "I shall serve him in my heart! I shall sing his praises, and all that I have shall be his. I will build a little hut for myself; but my flocks and the olive groves shall be the King's."

His lips paused. He held his breath. What strange thing was this! A mighty presence filled all space. He could not cry out! His heart was bounding within his breast. His whole being was singing though he made no sound.

His eyes, filled with a strange new light, were fixed upon the far distant eastern sky. From the millions of tiny, steady lamps hung there, one moved, moved on and on, as though a path had been marked out for it. His gaze followed. It paused not, but moved in a line across the heavens. The way was cleared before it. All other lights grew pale. There were millions there, but this one alone filled the heavens. Even the moon itself faded into insignificance before its presence.

How long it continued its course, Nathan knew not. It might have been hours. It may have been but a few minutes. Time was no consideration. Then it stopped, and hung like a suspended jewel.

Nathan watched it long. It remained stationary. Then he breathed deeply. The intensity of his emotions relaxed. "It's over in the direction of Bethlehem," he said.

He arose, standing erect, his eyes still upon the suspended star. He was young. His dark locks lay in soft curls upon his forehead. He was strong of limb, and straight as an arrow. His head was flung back, and his eyes, filled with a strange light born of the inspiration of the hour, were fixed on the star. As he stood so, there swept through his mind the memory of the old prophecies, centuries before fulfilled.

"I know not what it is," he said. "But the star calls me. I must go. It may be that the God of our fathers, the God who guided my father Abraham has read my heart, and knows how great has been its desire to see him who is to come as King of the Jews. It may be that over there in Jerusalem or Bethlehem the new King holds his court. I know not what awaits me there. But the star draws me and I must go."

He descended the hill, passed without a backward glance the house wherein Reuben and Levi and the other brothers lay sleeping. Down between the vine-covered hills of Judea, he hurried on, and on, each step bringing him nearer to the stable at Bethlehem over which the star, like a suspended jewel, yet hung.

The Second Place.

Breon arose with a dull pain in his head. He crawled from his bed and into a bath robe. With a discontented, fretful expression his eyes wandered over his bed-room and the apartment adjoining. Disorder was the prevailing mark. His evening clothes, which he had worn the previous night were scattered about on chairs and tables. His watch, face downward, lay on the floor. Mechanically, he stooped to pick it up. Walking to the window, where the light was better, he held the timepiece in his hand, examining it critically. The crystal was broken. It had stopped going the instant of its fall.

"Whew," he exclaimed. "It was pretty early—or late when I got in. Two o'clock. I didn't intend staying out so late when I started. I wonder what time it is now. Late enough, I reckon. No office for me to-day, and the boss to-morrow ready to give me fits. Oh, well, all goes in a lifetime. 'A short life and a merry one,' is my motto."

His expression, as he set about dressing, belied his words. Dissatisfaction and discontent had written themselves upon his face. His head ached. He worried about the money he had spent the evening before. Although he would have repudiated the suggestion had any one else presented it to his mind, he was troubled about what would be said at the office when he returned.

"It's no use going anywhere for lunch," he said, drawing on his overcoat, and with hat and gloves starting forth. "I couldn't eat anything now. I'll walk out some place where I can get air that isn't smoke thick."

He made his way down the traffic-filled street. He elbowed his way through the mass of pedestrians, hurrying along. He picked his way among street-cars and vehicles. He came face to face and passed by hundreds of people, yet he neither saw nor heard. The confusion made his head worse. The pain in his eyes was almost maddening.

He turned suddenly at a corner. He would leave the busy thoroughfare and go down some quiet street. He wheeled about, coming full against some hurrying pedestrian. Bundles fell in all directions. He stammered an apology, as he stooped to gather up the parcels. "Don't apologize. It was as much my fault as yours," cried a cheery, girlish voice. "I wasn't paying any attention to where I was going, and I had really more than I should have attempted carrying. But at Christmas time, one can not wait to have everything sent home from the shops."

She, too, had stooped to pick up her belongings. In a moment more, with arms laden, she had gone on her way.

At Christmas time! she had said. He had forgotten. To-morrow was Christmas, to be sure. But a stranger in a big selfish city tries to forget about such holidays. At Christmas time! At Christmas time! the words kept ringing in his ears. He strode forward. He was annoyed with himself that the words of a stranger would ring in his ears like this. He walked still faster. The street was quiet. Brick houses with their white marble steps rose high on both sides of him. In the windows, wreaths of holly tied with crimson bows were hanging.

From one of these houses came an old gentleman with silver hair. He stopped before Breon, extending his hand. "I'm glad I met you, my boy," he said. "You have been in my mind all morning. I would have gone to your rooms before this but I supposed you were in the office. I tried to read and write a little, but your face came up before all. I started out hoping to see you." He still retained the boy's hand in his own firm clasp. Breon could not look at him. He turned his eyes away, fixing his glance upon the street with its unbroken walls of brick and marble.

"Have you been ill, my boy?"

"No; not ill. My head has ached today." The old man relaxed his clasp. Placing both hands upon his shoulders, he turned the boy about so that he might look into his face. Breon's glance fell, but the old gentleman compelled him to look up into his face.

"I'm sorry, my boy. Your face and manner tells me all I feared. Your eyes have lost their clear light. You are ashamed to look your friends—look me—in the eyes. I have watched and guarded you all the while you have been in the city. I leave you for a month or more, and you go down. Isn't there enough manhood in you to stand alone? Must you always be propped up?

"I have been patient long enough. I thought there was enough good material in you to make a man"—the boy broke from under the restraining hands. He moved backward. This was harder to bear than a blow in the face. He moved away, but the words of the old man followed him. "But, I shall not give you up, Breon, I'll never do that. A boy with God-fearing parents such as yours will come back to the right way. The blood of your ancestors is bound to tell, and thank God, they were men and women worthy of the name. I'll hunt you up—" But Breon was beyond hearing.

The blood of his ancestors would tell! What did Dr. Clec mean by that! The boy was angry, defiant. He should like to have a quarrel with the old man, but he could not. The words of anger were checked on his lips. He was angry, defiant, ashamed. The blood surged against his temples like the beating of hammers. his anger hurried his footsteps. He passed from the residence streeets into narrow, straggling thoroughfares where the houses sagged at the beams, and had a general air of being about to tumble on the heads of passers-by. No Christmas wreaths were in the windows here. No Christmas ring was in the voices of those he met. Angry and unhappy though he was, this difference impressed him. The atmosphere of this section was not pleasant. He hurried from it as quickly as his feet could carry him. A feeling of relief came, when, passing the last house, he entered on the country road. He threw back his head and drank deep of the air which was free from factory smoke. He walked slower now. The quiet rested him. As he came to the knolls, with their leafless trees standing like sentinels, he quitted the road, making his way through the lifeless wood.

He gave no thought to how long or how far he was walking. A fallen tree half-buried in dead leaves gave him a resting-place. The walk in the bracing air had freed his head from pain. He thought of Dr. Clec's words. He wondered if this old friend would write back home to tell how their boy had been living.

What did Dr. Clec mean in saying that the blood of his ancestors would tell? He would come back to the right way. His ancestors! He brought to mind all that he could remember of them; fearless men who marked out a way and followed it; men whose word was as good as a bond; women of whom no one could speak lightly; women to whom all in distress came. These, his ancestors—plain folk, calm, serene and happy. So far as the world was concerned, he, a mere boy, had more than they, yet they had been happy.

From point to point, detail after detail, he brought back their lives. The whole long afternoon, he sat searching in his mind for that which had made them contented and happy. The blood of his ancestors! He knew it not, but at that moment it was crying out in him for the truth which had satisfied them.

With an effort, he aroused himself from his reverie. He was cold and stiff. The wood was growing gray in the twilight. He arose and moved down the cleared space of the hillside. Afar off, from some little country church came the sound of bells, calling the children together for the Christmas songs.

He paused to listen. Like Nathan of old on the hillside of Judea, he thought of all the promises and prophecies which time had seen fulfilled.

He removed his hat. Unconsciously he bowed his head. His own thoughts made the place holy. He stood in the presence of a mysterious power. "I know not what it is," he said, "but I must follow where these thoughts lead me. This is the eve of the birthday of Christ. He raised his head. Through the leafless trees, a star shone forth. The blood of his ancestors called out through his veins. "That same God will read my heart. I must go the way the bells are drawing me."

He stood until darkness fell. In the quiet thereof, the leafless trees and dull gray shadows, the Christ of Bethlehem, was born again.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Hurrah! I have every reason to believe that the picture of Felix will appear upon this page next week—our Christmas edition of the Advance Society. The "cut" is finished and I have seen it. It is good. Here comes a letter addressed to "J. Breckenridge Ellis, pastor Christian Church." Don't know 'im, so will have to pass this over to somebody else. Please don't ever anticipate a reply from "Rev." J. B. E. I am just an ordinary mortal with a cat. A lady told me not long ago that in Lawrence county, Mo., they held a convention, and she asked some of the preachers if they had heard of me. One said, "Ye-e-es, isn't he that man that writes about a cat?" This is fame. W. R. Warren writes for advice concerning the Centennial Campaign—how to make the churches strong and enthusiastic, the contributions for missions large, and in a word, how to best build up the cause. My advice is to live it. We've been preaching it a long time, and preaching it well, and let no preacher preach it less; but we who are not preachers—suppose we start into living it awhile, just to show the world what Christianity means when we don't bear grudges and don't give grudges, but forbear and forgive and love. Of course that would do away with the ridiculous anomaly of having any sort of a division in a church, or the absurdity of any sort of a quarrel among children of God. I don't know anything that would build up the cause quicker, or surprise the world more. Now, you take Felix, and some people he likes on sight, while others seem to turn his hair the wrong way whenever he sees them. Cats, too, he dislikes, and especially dogs. You take Felix as he is as I see him now, lying by the fire with his nose wedged between the joints of his two hind-legs and his tail sandwiched between all three, and his forepaws doubled up under his breast. There is not a soul in the house but the family—he knows that, you may be sure. There's a delightful rich odor upon the air that insinuates the fact that we are going to have meat to-day. Presently the dinner will be served. Felix purrs with satisfaction. His whiskers sweep over his tailtip with a graceful air of friendship for all the world. He reminds me of a church-member when nobody is bothering him. There's nothing that will keep an organization "harmonious" like each member having things just as he wants it. Now, if a dog should enter—a dog, for instance, who doesn't believe in cats—you would see Felix's tail bristle; and if the scent of meat proves a delusion, and it turns out that we have but our customary spread of baker's bread, potatoes and other vegetable products, Felix will stalk away in wrath and go to hold a meeting by himself over some unfortunate mouse. But is Felix a type for Christians to imitate? He is only a cat; let us be something more. What do you think of this, Mr. Warren? Think you can get this idea worked up?

GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST AND ON EARTH PEACE
GOODWILL TOWARD MEN

Drusie R. Malott, South Chihli Mission, China: "While looking through a box of papers to-day, I came across this letter which I thought I had mailed long ago. I am sorry for the delay." (Then comes the letter referred to): "It is six o'clock in the morning. I have just come in from the Mission Farm ready for a long day's work, preparing copy for our circular letter, and finished the addressing of letters and booklet. The little booklet tells the story of our mission up to the present time. May God add his blessing to it in calling other missionaries out here to the harvest, for oh! they are so badly needed. You would have enjoyed my drive through the country and city this morning. The sun was just peeping above the horizon, the birds were singing a sweet carol, and everything seemed as fresh and happy as could be." (This was received in July.) "One of our Chinese men pulled the rickisha—something like a two-wheeled buggy or cart, but smaller and much lighter. In the country the farmers were beginning their work. In the city the men were lined up on each side of the street, eating their breakfast—they buy a bowl of food and sit down on the ground or stand out on the sidewalk to eat it. In the suburbs the women and children as well as men, were gathered about the front entrance, eating their bowl of food. I loved the farm more than ever as I came into the city with its many odors. On the streets the dogs are so numerous that we almost had to run over them. Many Chinese do not kill dogs, believing that the spirits of their ancestors pass into the body of dogs, and that every dog one sees may contain the soul of one's grandfather, or some other relative." (I was wondering what was in that "bowl of food" you mentioned; I wish you had told us; but I know from what you say here, that it was without one ingredient that had occurred to me. I believe, however, the most orthodox Chinaman would scout the idea of his ancestor's soul entering the form of a mouse!) "It would have interested you to see our harvest reaped and threshed. The grain is cut by hand, with a sickle. When the last sheaf has been cut and gathered together, the word is given and dozens of gleaners rush in with rakes made from limbs of trees, and rake and sweep until not a sheaf is left. One can always tell when the gleaners begin because they rush in with such zeal that a big cloud of dust immediately envelops the field. When they quiet down a little, you can see them through the dust, dragging their rakes." (Now, I want to ask the people of Arkansas—what do you think of people "rushing" to do any sort of work?) "I often see 100 gleaners swoop down upon a little field not larger than a medium-sized garden in the homeland." (Just think of "swooping" down upon toil!) "They sit around the border of the field, waiting for the work to begin." (Now, I can understand that. It was that sort of thing, I fancy, that delayed the appearance of Felix's picture.) "The threshing-place is usually a piece of hard ground where the grain is spread and tramped" (as we do our apples for tinned-butter, I suppose, only we keep our boots on) "and tossed into the air until it is free from chaff. Last Tuesday was our day of fasting and prayer. We met from 6 to 10 a. m., and again from 11 to 6 p. m. It lasted 11 hours, but did not seem long. We did not want to stop even at the last, though the cook rang the supper-gong five times. He just had to wait till we came. Oh, it was such a blessed day! All study and work was put aside except the daily Chinese prayer-meetings, morning and afternoon; at such times, we have a whole day of waiting before the Lord in prayer, song, testimony. After supper we had a baptismal service. One of the lesser officials was baptized. He had witnessed the murder of one of the missionaries during the Boxer uprising at Paoting Fu, and the impression made then never left him. And now at last he came and asked for baptism. Pray for him. He says he is different from the other officials, and would like to be in the Lord's service. Oh, if you could only have been present at our meeting! He gave such a blessed testimony, so simple and childlike, so earnest and clear. About 25 Chinese Christians were present, and seven of us; and every one of us spoke for the Lord, of his wonderful goodness—spoke in Chinese, of course. Why! I could not have kept from it! Two women were present who had that day walked nineteen miles to hear about Jesus. They asked to be baptized. After hearing them express knowledge and confidence in Christ, they were baptized, too. Would you walk more than eighteen blocks to hear a message from God?" (Yes, many of us.) "When I heard about the awful earthquake and fire at San Francisco, it seemed to me but another sign of the times, telling us that the coming of our Lord is ever near. I want to 'go up' to meet him from this place where he has so marvellously brought me. What joy it will be to take some precious souls with me! Benton county, Arkansas, is not the only place that has fruit; we had some of the best apricots I ever tasted. They are one cent a dozen. We had peas and beets from our own garden. Let me assure all friends as well as members of the Av. S. that I ALWAYS rejoice over their letters."

Mrs. J. P. Cameron, Hockman, Va.: "I have been reading some of the Av. S. letters and am much interested in the orphan Charlie, and missionary Drusie. I am sending $1 from the Ladies' Aid Society, Graham Church, for Charlie; and I send $1 for Drusie's Christmas tree; any present will suit me that you think she will like. I only wish it were more, but hope she may get many dollars on the tree. May the Lord bless Drusie that she may win many souls to Christ." Mrs. A. P. Camren, Peoria, Ill.: "I send $1, half for Charlie, half for Drusie's Christmas tree. I hope they may be permitted to do much good in their lives. I do greatly enjoy reading about the grand work of the Av. S.; and the stories are fine. May you all be spared many days for the great work that is yet to be done." The Christian Pub. Co. forwards me 50 cents which Mrs. Mary E. Bradfield, New Metamoras, O., sends as Drusie's Christmas present. Mrs. D. M. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Carter, Hamilton, Mont., send 75 cents for Charlie and Drusie "wishing very much we could send more." Geo. W. Dawson, Kansas City, Mo.: "I failed to get any of Charlie's ice cream, but I want something on that Christmas tree! I inclose $2; divide it or give it to either as you see fit." (I will divide it) "God bless the Av. S. for the noble work it is engaged in." Mrs. S. M. Gibbins, Garfield, Wash.: "Here we are again with five dimes for five more saucers of ice cream. That orphan social has done me so much good that I keep asking others to partake, knowing the effects are as lasting as the benefit is mutual. Makes us realize the meaning of 'And in helping others, we ourselves of God are blessed.' One of these dimes is given by a dear little orphan boy who has been adopted; the others are from dear friends of mine. How it gladdens my heart to see the sum swell!"

Who Is Santa Claus?

It was just before Christmas, and the four little Wolseys were at work making presents. Baby John's work was peculiar; he was hammering tacks into a bar of kitchen soap, and he had to be constantly furnished with tacks to keep him from pounding the soap itself. Dorothy was stringing beads, with an apprehensive eye upon John, who, in spite of the mother's utmost efforts and the attractiveness of the soap, would make a dive for the bead-box every now and then. Norman was gilding a very unsymmetrical clay vase which he had made for his grandmother, and Carleton was putting the last links to a long "daisy chain" of colored paper, wherewith to decorate a certain Christmas tree. He was ensconsed behind a barricade of chairs, together with Norman and the gold paint, as the only means of escaping the too appreciative fingers of that diminutive tyrant, John.

Every one heaved a sigh of relief when Inga, the nurse, appeared to take the baby. He was borne off, howling indignantly; but, once outside the door, he stopped with ludicrous promptitude. Soon after he might have been heard shouting with laughter as he knocked down the blocks, which, with Inga's aid, he had laboriously piled up.

"Mamma," said Norman, breaking the blissful silence which followed John's departure, "the little boy next door said there was no such thing as Santa Claus. There is, isn't there?"

"Yes, dear," said mamma.

"A real, live man, with 'cheeks like a cherry,' with 'eyes how they twinkled, and dimples, how merry?'" persisted Norman.

"I never saw him," said mamma. "I should suppose that would be a pretty good picture of what he means."

"Oh, does he mean something?" asked Norman, in a disappointed tone.

"Yes, he does. Everybody does. You do."

"What do I mean?" he asked, looking puzzled.

"That's a riddle for you to find out. You've got all your life to work it out. You'll be lucky if you get it then."

"You're such a funny mamma," sighed Carlton. "Am I a riddle, too?"

"Yes, indeed, you are!" laughed his mother. "You're a riddle that's too much for me, every once in a while."

"Am I a riddle?" asked Dorothy. She didn't know what a riddle is, but she wanted to be in the game.

"Yes, you are, and I am, and everyone is. Santa Claus is."

"Is he just the kind of a riddle we are?" asked Norman.

"No, not exactly. But the difference is another riddle for you to guess."

"I know!" cried Norman. "I can see myself, but I can't see Santa Claus."

"Can you see yourself?" asked the mother.

"Of course."

"What can you see?"

"I can see my legs, and my arms, and my hands, and my stomach."

"Is that yourself?" interrupted his mother.

"They are parts of myself."

"Yes; but can you see all of yourself? Can you see your eyes, for instance?"

Norman ran to the looking-glass.

"There!" said he, pointing to the blue eyes that looked back at him, alive with intelligence.

"Are those your eyes?" asked the mother. "Your very eyes? If I should break the looking-glass, or cover it up, should I make you blind?"

The three children laughed like a chime of bells. Childlike, they loved an argument.

"Then you can't see yourself, can you? Neither can you see Santa Claus. But you can see parts of yourself, and you can see parts of him."

"Can we? Where? Where?" they all cried.

"Whenever you look into a kind person's eyes; whenever you see any one giving another pleasure. When Dorothy gives John a bite of her apple, then as you look at her, you catch a tiny glimpse of Santa Claus. When you get a surprise ready for mamma to welcome her home from down town, then any one looking at you sees a little bit of Santa Claus."

"Then he is just kind people, as Arthur said?" cried Norman, bitterly disappointed.

"No, indeed. All the kind people in the world put together wouldn't make Santa Claus. I said you could see parts of him, but not himself. The kind people are parts of him, sometimes. He whispers kind thoughts to them, one after the other. He flies from one to the other, like a bee from flower to flower, only instead of taking away sweetness, he gives it. His presents on Christmas day are only a few of his presents. He gives better ones every day, but he gives them so quietly that no one seems to know it. On Christmas day ev-

Stomach Sufferers Squander Millions.

In Search of Relief.

The world is full of disordered stomachs and 90 per cent of the money spent upon physicians and drugs goes in an attempt to cure the stomach.

People are made to believe that in order to gain health they must doctor their stomachs and use cathartics. So the doctor gets his fee for the stomach treatment and the druggist for the physic, until the savings of a life time are exhausted and yet no cure.

Let's be reasonable.

The sick stomach is in every case the result of over-eating, hurried mastication and improper choice of foods. The mucous lining all the way down the food tract loses its sensitiveness, and when food is forced down the muscles fail to respond. They do not churn the food as they should. The glands no longer give out gastric juice to dissolve the food and render it capable of assimilation. The man has become a dyspeptic.

There is one sure way and only one to bring positive relief. Put into that stomach of yours the very elements that it lacks to get that food into liquid form. It takes pepsin, diastase, golden seal and other ferments to accomplish this. The healthy stomach contains these elements. The dyspeptic stomach lacks part or all of them. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet is made up of just what the dyspeptic stomach lacks—nature's digestives.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are not a medicine, not a drug, not a cathartic. They do not cure anybody of anything but Dyspepsia and Indigestion and such ailments as arise from poorly digested food.

While they digest the food the stomach recuperates. The mucous membrane is coming out of its stupor, the gastric juice is coming to the surface, the muscles are regaining their power. Every organ of the body takes on new life, the skin gains color, and the eyes are no longer tinged with yellow. You live.

Why doctor and why drug yourself? Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will take care of your food while Nature cures you.

Try a box at your druggists, 50 cents. Or, if you prefer a free trial package before buying, send your name and address to-day. F. A. Stuart Co., 68 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

ery one suddenly recognizes him, and his invisible gifts become visible."

"What's visible?" asked Dorothy.

"You can't see his gifts of every day, but his Christmas gifts you can see," explained her mother.

"But I want to see him, myself," said Dorothy. "I am going to hold my eyes open and watch when I hang up my stockings."

"You would never see him if you should," answered her mother. "Santa Claus is a fairy, dear, and you can never see fairies, nor quite understand them. When you think you are just going to catch them they vanish away. Santa Claus hides in many ways. He hides in the people you know. If you should stay awake you would probably see what would look like mamma and papa filling your stockings, yet all the time it would be Santa Claus."

A Legend for Christmas.

BY JAMES SMALL.

Hope was a young man, Memory was a young damsel. Hope wanted to marry Memory, but Memory refused, saying that Hope was a deceiver. Hope remonstrated. Memory was unmoved. Well, said Hope, let us take a journey around the world together. To this Memory agreed.

When they returned they met a man that was much younger when they started off, and into whose heart Hope had poured bright anticipations. Memory at once recognized him and began to question him. She found that every hope had been realized and everything Hope had spoken to him had come to pass.

Memory at once said: "Hope, shame wronged you, let us wed." They wed. Since that day Hope and Memory have been linked in eternal embrace.

Memory can look back to the day that Jesus slept upon a mother's knee and remember how he grew in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man and how the Son of Man pitied and toiled and suffered to win man's love, and Hope looks to the future with "inspiring thoughts of raptures yet to be" and with Campbell in "The Pleasures of Hope," say:

Eternal Hope, when yonder spheres sublime,
Pealed their first note to sound the march of time,
Thy joyous youth began but not to fade,
When all the sister planets have decayed.
When wrapt in fire the realms of ether glow,
And heaven's last thunder shakes the world,
Thou undismayed shall o'er the ruins smile
And light thy torch at nature's funeral pile.

Wishing the boys and girls, and all a happy Christmas and a prosperous New Year with Jesus as our leader and partner.

Christ's kingdom is growing. In the days when he walked in Galilee, Rome was mistress of the world. The victories of Napoleon mean nothing now. Time has undone his work. It is only Christ whose glory grows with the centuries, whose power increases, whose kingdom spreads. And "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end."

The Riding Song of the Magi.

With a quick little chime like a ripple of rhyme,
A shake from our camel's small bells;
With a song on our lips as the soft night slips
We come as the Star compels.

From slumber and feast, from far out of the East,
We ride, for we can not but choose
To seek through the earth the place of the birth,
Of this mystical King of the Jews.

We have gifts in our hands for this child of far lands,
Three gifts for the child that's thrice great;
Bright gold have we brought for the King we have sought,
Red gold for the King's high state.

And myrrh do we bring for his burying,
For his delicate body's behoof,
When as man in the ground with the fair linen bound,
They house him with earth for a roof.

And frankincense we bear as the Godhead's share,
A tribute for God-head divine;
Its savor that stays while the years go their ways
Is of life everlasting the sign.

So ride we along with offering and song
To kneel at the door where he dwells.
Through deserts and marts with a prayer in our hearts,
We come as the Star compels.

DISCOVERY OF CHRISTMAS TREES.

How the Worthless Balsam-fir Became the Christmas Tree.

It is natural for us to take it for granted that there have always been Christmas trees, yet fifty years ago there were few in America, save in the homes of foreigners. About thirty years ago a number of duck-hunters cruising along the coast of Maine noticed the millions of young balsam firs which grew along the shores, and the brilliant idea occurred to one member of the party that these symmetrical evergreens would make excellent Christmas trees. At this time the "abandoned farm" era had begun and it looked as if the whole state would grow up to firs. The balsam fir used to be a synonym for worthlessness. Nowadays "Canada balsam" is made from this tree, and thousands of vacation tourists gather its young twigs for "balsam pillows." But the wood has always been useless to the lumberman. Therefore, when the New York yachtsman offered to buy a few shiploads of young firs, the honest Maine farmers failed to see the joke. But when the city man opened his purse they fell to with a will.

The first venture proved a success, and others hurried into the business. Ten years later the whole coast of Maine was stripped of firs and the business moved inland. From this beginning the trade has grown until now a million and a half of Christmas trees are sold every year in New York and New England, of which about a million come from Maine alone.

"Mamma," asks the little boy, "how can Santa Claus get into our flat, when we haven't any chimney—nothing but a steam radiator?"

"He will probably slip in by the basement door, darling."

"It's all off, then," said the lad, with a surprising vigor in the use of slang. "That janitor will put him out of business before he can unpack his sack."

—Don't forget your friend's library at Christmas time. We have books that will help them into new careers of happiness and usefulness.

—In these closing days of the year make out your book list for 1907 and send it to us. We will submit to you prices enabling you to get the very most and best for your money.

—For two new subscriptions, accompanied by the $3 we will give the sender choice of either an excellent stereopticon and 50 scenic cards, or an initial-letter fruit set consisting of seven beautiful plates.

—If you will send the 1907 CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to a friend for a Christmas present, you will be reduplicating a most delectable gift 52 times and bring your name and face to his memory as often.

—There ought to be great improvement in the Bible schools of the land during 1907, for the W. W. Dowling literature is being received for the first time into so many of them. We have a right to expect it.

—"If you will authorize me to do so I can get you a big club of trial subscribers here for 25 cents for two months."—L. S. D. Brother: Don't fool with "trial" subscribers now. We are too busy enrolling yearly subscriptions for $1.50.

—There is an actual ministerial "dead line"—not determined by age, but by stagnation. Readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the new books advertised in its columns do not become conscious of it nor do their hearers think of them as being in near proximity to it.

—We wish to again commend to the consideration of the "Committee on Supplies" our new Teachers' Quarterlies. These help the teachers to quickly grasp the main points of the lesson and suggest the best methods of presenting them to the bright minds and receptive hearts before the teacher.

> The Alexander Campbell number is most excellent. Couldn't you get all those pictures on one nice card for framing and sell us all a copy? It would be a premium many would work for too, I am sure. That issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will certainly be very helpful to all our young ministers, and there ought to be several thousand extra copies for our pastors to give to fellow pastors of the other churches.—Geo. C. Ritchey, (evangelist) Monmouth, Oregon.

If our friends desire it, we will.

—Preacher, don't miss this opportunity of adding one or both these great books to your library free of cost to you. For one new subscription accompanied by the $1.50, we send you postpaid either "Helps to Faith," by J. H. Garrison, or "Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell. Any preacher in the land can easily thus secure one or both these dynamic books. "Do it now."

—The "Herald and Presbyter" thus speaks of one of our most popular books:

> The Holy Spirit. By J. H. Garrison, Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Cloth. 12mo, $1. Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis. It is very gratifying to find this treatise, which the Editor says, in his preface, "is written from the general point of view of the Disciples of Christ," is close to the faith generally held by evangelical Trinitarian believers. So vital is the Scriptural truth as to the Holy Spirit in his person, office and work, that it is a joy to see that truth so clearly expressed as it is in this volume.

—"Our Young Folks" and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST $2.00; a fountain pen and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, $2.00; "The American Boy" (a splendid paper for boys) and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, $2.00; "The Ladies' Home Companion" and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, $2.25; a self-filling fountain pen, warranted by makers 10 years and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST (to a new subscriber), $2.50; "The Review of Reviews" (price $3) and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, $3.00. Both the paper and the premiums make choice Christmas gifts. They may be ordered now and we will hold and later send labeled "For Christmas."

—Christmas diversions have interfered with the composition of new clubs for the past few days, but in addition to the larger number coming by ones and twos we are pleased to report the following new lists:

The Christian Lesson Commentary for 1907.

For the twenty-second consecutive year, this Christian Commentary has come before the Sunday-school public offering its aid in the study of the International Series of Lessons. It has gained and holds a high place in the schools of the brotherhood as a safe, sound, practical Bible school commentary, embodying the best thoughts of the best thinkers, as well as those of the author on the lessons studied. The volume for 1907, now lying before us, is not inferior to any of its predecessors. Like wine, it seems to grow better with age. Brother Dowling is, of course, a past master in the art of Sunday-school work and in the preparation of literature for the schools. The lessons for 1907 are all in the Old Testament. As the year 1906 was devoted to the study of the Words and Works of Jesus the coming year will be devoted to the Stories of the Patriarchs and Judges, beginning with Creation and ending with Samuel. Besides the lesson material proper, with its ample illustrations which are numerous and its maps, there are the quarterly class records, and the pronouncing dictionary of Bible names. The owner of this volume will be well-equipped for his Sunday-school work for 1907. Price, $1. Address Christian Publishing Company.

A $250,000 CENTENNIAL FUND

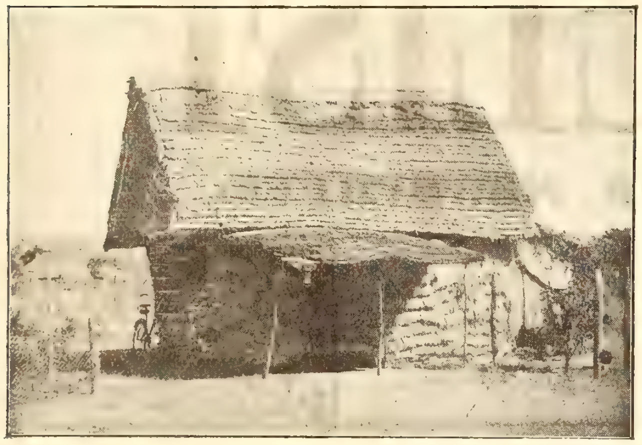
Our Centennial in Pittsburg, 1909

The friends of the Foreign Society express themselves enthusiastically in favor of this important move

A STRIKING CONTRAST

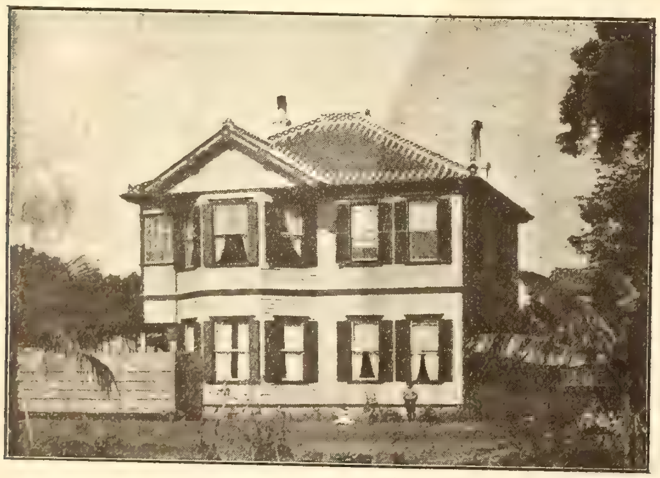


Contrast this grass hut with the home of F. E. Hagin at Tokyo, Japan, a picture of which is below.

To compel the missionaries to live in century-old, vermin-infected, unventilated buildings is to handicap them in their work and endanger their health and their very lives.

GRASS HOUSE AT DAMOH, INDIA.

Where J. G. McGavran and family lived for a time. They are missionaries of the Foreign Society. They uttered no word of complaint. It is evident they could not do their best work living here. It is not sufficient protection from the extreme heat and heavy rains, and besides there is not sufficient room. We ought not ask our missionaries to live in a place like this. Their health and lives are endangered.



Contrast this home with the grass hut at Damoh, India, the picture of which is above.

HOME OF F. E. HAGIN, TOKYO, JAPAN.

This is a modern, up-to-date home, recently built by the Foreign Society at a cost of about $2,000. It is commodious and convenient. It will last many years. Here the missionary and his family can live in comfort and do their best work. Their health and lives will be protected. Besides a good example to the native population. It helps to give them a higher estimate of Christianity.

GOOD NEWS.

A good man and wife have just turned over $8,450 to the Foreign Society on the Annuity Plan. This goes into the Centennial Building Fund. We hope others will take this step. We are receiving cash and pledges every day for a great Centennial Fund. Will you not join the friends in this mighty movement? Please let us hear from you at once.

What Some of the Friends Think.

The call for building equipment seems a most modest one on the part of our Foreign Society. With the increase and development of the work there must be increasing demands for such a building plant to insure permanency. F. D. POWER.

Pastor Vermont Avenue Church.

Washington, D. C.

I hope the Foreign Society will be successful in providing additional building equipment in foreign fields. Necessary buildings are a great help anywhere, but especially on the foreign field.

R. E. HIERONYMUS,

President of Eureka College.

Eureka, Ill.

I am in perfect accord with the proposition of the Foreign Society to secure $250,000 for buildings and equipment in foreign fields. It is timely, and if accomplished will be a great stride in advance in our foreign work. C. J. TANNAR.

Pastor of Central Church.

Detroit, Mich.

I can say without hesitation that I think no part of the work of the Foreign Board is more important than that of erecting proper buildings for the missionaries in foreign fields. It seems to me scarcely possible to build up a church of influence in any heathen land, or even in any civilized land, without a suitable house in which to hold their meetings, and suitable apartments in which to reside. I hope that you will very soon realize your purpose and expectations in this matter.

J. W. McGARVEY,

President of the College of the Bible.

Lexington, Ky.

To provide homes for our missionaries is the sanest business policy introduced into the realm of the Lord's work. Properly housed, all their forces and resources are conserved, wastes are avoided, and the missionaries are ever at their best. When to comfortable homes there is added complete working equipment in chapels, schools, hospitals and orphanages, we are only multiplying the power of our representatives at the front. Churches at home should share the sadness of our missionaries in often facing great opportunities with their hands tied by lack of proper equipment.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

CENTENNIAL GLEAMINGS.

The information Brother Rains gives us concerning the great philanthropy proposed by the curators of Hiram college is most inspirational. That Home and its supplemental scholarships are evidences that we are rapidly passing the tentative stages of our missionary activities beyond the seas. We are not sending preachers and their wives abroad on holiday jaunts, nor merely to stay till their little ones have come to school age. This is notification to candidates for missionary careers that permanence is part of the fruitage expected of their ministry. It is confidently expected that the reflex influence of this strengthenng of stakes will enable our enterprising Foreign Missionary Society to greatly lengthen its cords before 1909.

In expressing such sentiments as glow in Brother Lowe's "Passing of the Partisan," one must "walk delicately" lest he convey the impression that he is not contending earnestly for the faith once delivered, and as it was comprehended by "the fathers" of one hundred years ago, or rather as some of us think they comprehended it. Constituted as we are, it is difficult for us to keep from becoming partisan; but free from it we must be to overcome the partisanship that has divided the body of Christ and weakened the church in the presence of the Canaanite who is still in the land. They only who have largely eradicated the "I am for Cephas" spirit from their hearts, will trail the cord of extension, dyed in the Saviour's blood, as a boundary line around the land of the denominationalist, annexing it as a province to the growing empire of primitive Christianity. Let us prepare ourselves to do this to a notable degree before our Centennial celebration begins. Presbyterians are consolidating; Congregationalists, United Brethren and Methodist Protestant are uniting; are there not some segments of the great circle of the church universal we can altogether persuade to walk in the more excellent way, and become Christians only before the century's close? Let us work and pray to the end that at Pittsburg reports may be made of actual, practical beginnings of Christian unions being accomplished by denominations also as well as by units.

The Passing of the Partisan.

BY J. M. LOWE.

Denomination is less and less and the Kingdom of God is more and more. Gradually we are freeing ourselves from the tangle of tiresome discussion and seeing and grasping the things that abide. Beneath the turbulent tide there is the all-supporting sea. Many different lights glimmer and gleam on earth, but the sun is above them all. Humanity is larger than family, state and nation, and no thought, social or religious, can come to its best without relating itself to the whole. To cherish for ourself a set of ideas while ignoring the whole, is a species of selfishness which, though it may wear the "livery of heaven," we are at a loss to know how possession was secured, unless the Bard of England has informed us. But not even the livery of heaven can long conceal the hopeless impotence of a doctrine which vainly supposes itself a master instead of a servant, and which fails to see that it cannot be of value unless it expresses itself in ever more increasing sympathy and comprehensiveness. The end is not doctrine but character, not creed, but deed, not party, but humanity. No more surely will a pond of water, cut off from supply, dry up and disappear, than will the party that exists for itself decay, for truth has a most resistless way of disposing of things it does not need, for truth is the invisible and eternal life of the universe.

With these thoughts in mind, it is easy to see that our great brotherhood, pursuing one course will find a locked gate, going another direction we will behold an open pathway into ever enlarging fields of service. Yonder is the field of battle. The hosts are gathering. The ranks are closing. Let us on to the conflcit, lest we "disappear."

A Commendable Enterprise.

BY F. M. RAINS.

Hiram College, Hiram, O., proposes to raise a special fund of $25,000 with which to provide a home for the children of the missionaries of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and to grant them free tuition while they pursue their studies. The proposed home is to be deeded to the Foreign Society, free of charge, and the society is to furnish and equip and support and manage it for the exclusive use of the children of missionaries while their parents continue their work on the foreign field. After the home has been secured, the rest of the fund is to be used as an endowment to provide the free tuition. This is a generous proposition on the part of Hiram College and one which the society, on behalf of the missionaries, fully appreciates. Hiram is a great center of missionary interest and enthusasm.

The education of the children of missionaries has now come to be a serious problem. In the early days of our foreign work before the families of the missionaries had grown up, we did not have to face this perplexing situation. At the present time there are some ten or a dozen children of missionaries in this country attending school and away from their parents. Others are coming soon and still others ought to come. Satisfactory homes and home surroundings with proper school and church advantages are hard to combine. We believe the new arrangement fully meets all the difficulties.

It is hoped that the friends of Hiram College will give the agents of the institution a cordial reception and generous aid in the very laudable undertaking of providing the $25,000 at the earliest possible date. School facilities are very limited on the various mission fields. This important step has been under consideration for a long time. The children must be educated in America. The missionaries can not abandon their work while the children are in school.

The New Hope.

George Hamilton Combs, in an address that ought never to be forgotten, delivered at Hannibal last summer, called it "The Newest Evangelism." It is another name for the limitless opportunities of extending the Kingdom through the medium of our Bible schools.

"The newest evangelism is all permeating and inclusive. Unify your Bible school and you unify the church as a whole. Get the man or the woman and you have gotten one; get the child and you have gotten both man and woman.

"We are approaching our Centennial. We would double our membership to two and a half million members by 1909. Along the present lines of effort we shall not even come within sight of such accomplishments. We are but toying with a battle cry. We have no confidence in our undertaking. And yet it is practicable. We can, if we will, double our membership by that centennial hour. If every church in our great brotherhood shall concentrate its efforts on our Bible schools, putting time into them, putting work into them, striving earnestly and heroically to double their membership and convert them into fire-hot evangelistic forces and agencies—if every church would but do this there would arise to us such Pentecostal awakenings as this old world has never seen before, and when that memorable year should have rolled around we should turn a mighty host two and a half million strong toward the gates of Pittsburg and with jubilation and with song praising God for his wonderful works among the children of men."

In keeping with this sentiment we are pleased to announce that beginning with our next issue Bro. J. H. Hardin will inaugurate in this paper a new department, "The Practical Bible School," in which will appear brief and pointed hints on matters that concern the organization and management of Bible schools and all matters pertaiing to "The New Hope." This, we believe, will be one of our most valuable contributions to the Centennial propaganda.

Roosevelt and Congress.

If any one is surprised at the attitude of Congress, particularly of the Senate, towards President Roosevelt, it must be because he is not a close student of current political history. The dismissal of the colored troops for their disgraceful conduct in the Brownsville, Texas, affair, and the president's attitude toward the Japanese question in San Francisco are only occasions which certain political leaders have been anxiously looking for to make war on the president and lower his prestige and popularity in the country. His aggressive opposition to trusts, his recommendation of the inheritance tax, his views on railroad regulation and other measures of similar character, are not popular with many of the political leaders of his own party, nor with the political bosses in any party. They dare not make an issue with him on these questions, however, and so are glad to find their opportunity in the matters above referred to. The ultimate decision of the Brownsville episode will turn on the facts in the case, which are now being newly investigated. The San Francisco school question has probably been unduly magnified. No doubt some way will be found by which Japan's treaty rights will be enforced, as the president desires, without interfering seriously with the local question of where the few dozen Japanese children in San Francisco shall go to school. But when these questions are settled other occasions will be found for antagonizing the president, whose policy does not commend itself to the grave and reverend senators, with whom politics is more than statesmanship.

France and the Roman Catholics.

It is difficult for the people of this country to get a clear idea of just what is involved in the present issue between the government in France and the Roman Catholic Church. On the one hand it is urged by the government and its friends that the effort is simply to effect a separation between Church and State, and to prohibit any interference with the government of France by an outside religious potentate. Americans are apt to think of this as analagous to what we have in this country. Archbishop Ireland, however, says that the separation of Church and State "has a totally different signification" in France to what it has in this country. "The separation of the Church from the State in America means liberty and justice; there it means oppression." He also quotes from Pius X, who said: "We are ready to submit to separation, but it must be a fair separation, such as obtained in the United States, in Brazil, in Great Britain, in Holland, and not a subjection." The archbishop thinks it is a party of infidels and atheists that is making war against religion, and not simply against the Roman Catholic Church. It is difficult to understand, however, how France, after the experience of the revolution of 1789, would undertake again to put down religion as an abiding force in human life. No doubt there are complications in this question that Americans do not yet fully comprehend. It is certain, however, that any legislation aimed against Christianity, or even any unjust legislation against the rights of the Roman Catholic Church will ultimately fail, and Archbishop Ireland is probably right in predicting a happy issue to the present struggle with a clearer understanding between the Church and State.

More Centralization.

That the federal government is destined to play a larger, and the state governments a smaller, part in the control of affairs in this country, is the opinion voiced by Secretary Root in his speech last week at the dinner of the Pennsylvania Society in New York City. The tendency, he says, is toward the obliteration of state lines. It is true that many influences are working in this direction. The increase of facilities for transportation, the movements of population from one state to another, the volume of interstate commerce and business and social relations generally—all tend to create a homogeneity of population and of governmental problems which has no parallel in the conditions of the thirteen states when the present scheme of federal and state government was formulated. Bad corporation laws, bad divorce laws, or bad administration of any laws in one state are an injury to all the other states. The question ultimately is not one of constitutionality, but of efficiency. If state governments permanently fail to govern with due regard to the welfare of the citizens of the nation, then some way will be found by which the federal government can take on those functions which the states show themselves unable to discharge. Meanwhile it will be the very important business of the party of the opposition to sound the note of alarm against dangerous encroachments of the federal power. It would not be strange if, when the Democratic party finds itself after its recent wanderings in the wilderness, the issue between the two great parties should be drawn upon the question of states rights more clearly than it has since the days of the Civil War.

Car Shortage.

The complaint of the people in the Northwest, especially in the Dakotas, of a coal famine and the dissatisfaction of shippers in the south with railroad facilities caused the president to institute an official inquiry as to the reasons of this alleged shortage of cars. Judge Prouty has been in St. Louis for several days taking the testimony of prominent railroad men and of shippers with a view of getting at the bottom facts. According to the evidence submitted the responsibility for this shortage in cars must be distributed between the railroads, the shippers and some of the middle men, who come between the railroads and the shippers. No doubt the roads have an inadequate supply of cars, but there is also lack of a wise use of the supply on hand. Cars are allowed to stand loaded with coal for several days in the yards, because the demurrage fees are less than the cost of storage. In talking with a railroad expert on this subject he claims that it is the speculator who comes in between the railroad and the consumers who causes this delay of cars in the yards, and that if the shipments could be made direct to the men for whom they are intended, this delay would be avoided. Another remedy he suggests would be to raise the price of demurrage to $3 a day per car instead of $1 per day. Already the good effects of the inquiry are being seen, and when the evidence is all in, there will probably be needed some legislation to avoid the evil from which the country has been suffering.

America and the Japs.

We are not afraid of Japan but that is no reason why we should pick a fight with her. Doubtless Japan is slightly megacephalous just at present as the result of her war with Russia, and unduly sensitive upon small points of national dignity like the segregation of her children in separate schools in San Francisco. But if so, it is no reason why we should choose precisely this time to take any measure which, while only slightly beneficial to us, would be highly offensive to them. One of the six special messages which the president sent to Congress last week (rather a big week's work even for our vigorous executive) conveyed the report of Secretary Metcalf who is investigating the situation on the coast. Mr. Metcalf reports that there have been numerous violent and riotous attacks on the persons and property of Japanese and that the local and state government has not as yet shown its ability to give adequate protection. If they fail to do so, the federal government will be compelled to interfere. The objection which the people of San Francisco make to allowing Japanese adults to attend the public schools with American children is well founded. It would be objectionable to permit adults of any race to do so. Suit has already been brought to determine the right of the local authorities to exclude Japanese children on the score of their race alone, but the government hopes that the school boards will see their way to admit Japanese children, to whom there can be no serious objection, while excluding adults from the schools.

The Circuit of the Year.

The calendar reminds us we are at the close of another year. The revolving earth, in its circuit around the sun, has brought us through the changing seasons, and is now completing its annual course, as it has been doing since time began. For

> "Just as of old the seasons come and go.
> The spring with its flowers, and the winter with its snow."

Time, the great tomb-builder, moves on his resistless way, neither quickening his speed to gratify the desire of youth, nor retarding it to suit the plans of age. Men come and go like bubbles on a stream, but the world goes on forever. Empires rise and fall. Generation follows generation with rapid pace, and the world moves on to its far-off destiny. How infinite must be the plan of God which embraces all these diverse and short-lived movements and agencies, and holds them all in subjection to the divine purpose! When one pauses, as he must at this season of the year, to think of the brevity of his own little life, of the immensity of God's universe, of the infinite scope of the all-embracing purpose of God, he can but feel humbled and awed into silence, as he realizes how infinitesimally small must be the place which any one life can fill in bringing about the realization of God's plan and purpose.

The year past has been an eventful one in the history of the world. A simple narration of the events of historic value would occupy more space than we can give. In our own nation events of far-reaching importance have taken place. The political and industrial life of the nation seems to be undergoing a process of regeneration. We are still in the midst of the process, however, and how long it will continue, and just what the outcome will be, no human mind can foresee. Of one thing we may be assured, and that is that God's hand is in all these movements, and that out of them we shall come, ultimately, a purer, juster, and more enlightened nation. Not less certain may we feel that the great world-movement among the nations of the earth to secure a larger measure of rights and of equality among men will issue in greater freedom for the masses, who will be given a larger share of power and responsibility in government. In all the struggles of the past, the rights of the common people have ultimately triumphed over the tyranny of despots and the intrigues of courts.

This is only saying, after all, that the kingdom of God is growing in the world, and asserting its power more and more over the affairs of human life. God is as surely with his people in their affliction and oppression, to-day, as he was with his ancient people in the brick kilns of Egypt. He is behind all movements for the betterment of human conditions, for the alleviation of suffering, for the promotion of righteousness, peace and unity among men, and for whatever makes for the progress of mankind. It is for us to be co-workers with God in carrying out his beneficent designs for the redemption of the world. The time is short in which any of us can do our little part to bless the world. In a little while we shall have accomplished our brief course on earth and have passed on to fulfill God's purpose in other spheres of activity that lie beyond. The swiftly-passing years remind us that what we do must be done quickly. They ought to remind us, also, that only that which is done for God will live as an abiding force for good in the world.

A Backward Glance.

One can scarcely close the arduous labors of a year without a look backward over what has been accomplished within the year. No man's work, perhaps, ever looks so large in retrospect as it does in prospect. We rarely, if ever, accomplish within the limits of a year all that we had hoped to do. We notice from the number, as well as from the date which The Christian-Evangelist bears this week, that this number completes its forty-third volume. There is not a large number of religious papers in the country that date back beyond the birth of this journal. Most of those that came into existence "to meet a long felt want," as was supposed, have died young. Only now and then one survives the vicissitudes of time, and the diseases incident to newspaper infancy and childhood and attains its majority. Although the religious newspaper is not subject to the limitations of a human life, few have surpassed the period of three score and ten which the psalmist alloted to man.

In this backward glance over the year that has passed we can but feel thankful that we have been able, during each of the fifty-two weeks, to perform our allotted tasks. In the vast amount of matter we have written for the paper during the year, under all sorts of conditions, and often under depressing or disturbing influences, there has no doubt been much that has failed to come up to a high standard of literary excellence, and here and there, perchance, there has been a sentence or a phrase which, on maturer reflection, might have been left unwritten. It would be strange, at least, if this were not the case. As we look back over the work of the year in retrospect, however, it is a matter of no small comfort to us that we are conscious of having been actuated, in all that we have written and published, by the sincere desire to promote truth, build up our readers in the faith and service of God, and advance the reign of Christ among men.

It has been a year marked by earnest discussion in our journals, in which all have not seen alike but in which substantial progress has been made in solving some of the great problems which confront us. Time, which tests all things, will put its seal of approval or disapproval on what has been said on the one side and on the other. The winds of God which winnow out the chaff, leave all the wheat; and the fire which tests every man's work, of what sort it is, will burn up only the wood, hay and stubble, leaving unharmed, and only purified by trial, the gold, silver and precious stones. On all these questions we have tried to write in view of these tests of God. But whatever may be the fate of the work we have accomplished, we look confidently for his approval of the motive which prompted it.

We can not look back, in retrospect, without feeling our debt of gratitude, not only for the divine help and guidance, but for the earnest co-operation of many hearts and many hands of those who have wrought with us for the same common ends. A religious journal worthy of the name is vastly more than the personal organ of any one man or group of men; it is the medium of expression for a great body of believers, who use its columns for mutual interchange of thought, and for reporting what the Lord has wrought through them. We are profoundly grateful, too, for that vast body of friends whose names and contributions do not appear on our pages, but whose sympathy and endorsement have been expressed in their patronage and in assisting us in extending our circulation. In no year of its existence has The Christian-Evangelist had so many marks of public approval, nor so many new readers, as in the year now closing.

In the heat of the discussions of the year this paper's position has been grossly misrepresented, and some bitter partisans have accused its editor of abandoning the faith and betraying the sacred cause which has been committed to our hands. These things have not moved us from our straightforward course of advocating those movements and principles which we believe Christ approves and which are necessary to the triumph of the kingdom of God. Nor have we cherished any feeling of bitterness towards those who have thus misrepresented us. They may be as conscientious as we have tried to be. We are sure we could not have pursued a different course and maintained a good conscience toward God. We do not impugn the motive of others. God has made some things very clear to us. We can but be true to the light He has shown us. But we shall go out of the Old Year into the New Year, God willing, "with malice toward none and with charity for all."

And so, looking back over the year, we can but thank God for the past, and commit ourselves to Him for the future. His grace and wisdom, which have been our reliance in the past, are our hope in the years to come.

Notes and Comments.

The "Religious Herald" of Richmond, Va., prints an able address delivered by Dr. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, at Louisville, Ky., at the General Baptist Association in Richmond, Va., entitled "A New Defense of the Baptist Position." The address is an elaboration of the six axioms, which he stated at the Disciples' Congress at Indianapolis, namely:

1. The theological axiom: The holy and loving God has a right to be sovereign.
2. The religious axiom: All souls have an equal right to direct access to God.
3. The moral axiom: To be responsible man must be free.
4. The ecclesiastical axiom: All believers have a right to equal privileges in the Church.
5. The social axiom: Love your neighbor as yourself.
6. The religio-civic axiom: A free Church in a free State.

These propositions Dr. Mullins rightly affirms are "self-evident. They are the axioms of religion. The instructed religious consciousness cannot and will not repudiate them, however inconsistent men may be in applying them." They exclude infant baptism, all systems of hierarchy, and the union of church and state, as Dr. Mullins contends.

As to the relation of Baptists and other religious bodies to these axioms of religion, Dr. Mullins says:

> Now, two of these axioms Baptists have not been alone in holding—viz.: the theological and the social. But four of them they alone have consistently held throughout their history. Three of them they alone consistently hold to-day— viz.: the religious, the moral, and the ecclesiastical. The soul's right to deal with God directly, the soul's freedom in obeying the ordinances, and the equality of believers in Church life, Baptists alone consistently hold. One wing of the Church of the Disciples of Christ agree with us in holding them, but the other wing puts baptism between the soul and God, by making baptism a condition of remission of sins.

This statement by so able and fair-minded a man as Dr. Mullins concerning the attitude of "one wing" of the Disciples of Christ to one of these axioms, will be certain to interest all our readers, among whom we take it are both "wings." Dr. Mullins' remark raises this question: Does he mean that the position that baptism is in any sense for remission of sins, conflicts with the axiom of "the soul's freedom in obeying that ordinance"? He does not, for he himself believes that baptism is for the ceremonial remission of sins. In what sense, then, must one view baptism in relation to remission of sins, to conflict with "the soul's freedom in obeying the ordinances"? The view that baptism is absolutely essential in all cases to remission of sins, whether one understands the command and his duty to obey it or not. The "wing" among the Disciples of Christ that holds that arbitrary view of baptism is so small as to be a negligible quantity. It is only one of the pin-feathers of undeveloped theological birdlings.

But Dr. Mullins' statement raises another question: Is the position that baptism is "unto remission of sins" in the sense that it is a help which God has given to the believer to enable him, by actual self-commitment to Him in that overt act, to gain the assurance of divine forgiveness, in conflict with the axiom referred to above? Hardly, we should say. And yet such a view "puts baptism between the soul and God," not as a fence to keep him away, however, but as a gate to admit him into closer fellowship with God. In other words, if baptism be regarded as a condescension on the part of sovereign love to human need in helping men, by means of a definite, concrete act of self-surrender, to commit themselves to Christ as Saviour and Lord, and thus to come into a relation of peace with God, it is in perfect harmony with the soul's freedom, and with every other axiom of religion, as well as with the clearest New Testament teaching. Does Dr. Mullins hold that such a view is contrary to his axiom? We would be glad to know.

In his department of Biblical Criticism in the "Christian Standard," Bro. J. W. McGarvey, after quoting and commenting on a paragraph from "The Scroll," says:

> I think it now in order to ask J. H. Garrison, who is an honorary member of the Institute by which this Scroll is published, whether he is really in sympathy with it. I have a right to ask this; for it is declared in the constitution of the Institute, as I have already quoted, that before one is elected to honorary membership he must be investigated by the nominating committee to make sure that he is in sympathy with the organization. If he is not, he owes it to himself, and to the cause of Christ, to say so publicly and positively, This is also the duty of every member whose sympathies are misrepresented; and I am glad to know that some members have withdrawn their membership on the ground that it grossly misrepresents them.

If this were from some one for whom we feel less respect than we do for Brother McGarvey, we should not feel called upon to notice it. Neither Brother McGarvey nor any intelligent, fair-minded reader of the above paragraph, needs to be told that sympathy with these young men and with the general purpose of their organization to keep up their scholarly habits and to pursue certain lines of investigation, does not commit one to an endorsement of all their views. Otherwise we would all be found in a most embarrassing position. Few of us could remain connected with any missionary organization, or with any church, if such connection involved an endorsement of all the views of all the other members. On this principle think how many readers of the "Christian Standard" would be compelled to stop the paper!

We know personally many of the young men of the Campbell Institute, and admire their characters and ability. They understand quite well that we do not share all their views, for we have met with them once or twice and have contested their positions. Nor do they all agree among themselves. They do not have to. Recently we criticised an utterance of "The Scroll," and shall feel perfectly free to do so in the future. When they notify the Editor that this attitude of freedom to criticise their public statements is inconsistent with his honorary membership in their organization, he will at once cancel it. Meantime we are as free to criticise its members as Brother McGarvey is to criticise a member of even his own college faculty, although he is no doubt in "sympathy with the organization."

We are printing elsewhere in this number another installment of the contributions to the "Missing Link" problem. The article by Bro. Wright, on account of his official position will no doubt attract wide attention. It is marked by that breadth of spirit and safe conservatism which believes, nevertheless, in going forward, characteristic of the man and his writings. None of us, we think, wishes to go faster than the general procession can move that is moving at all, or that believes in moving forward, in a co-operative way, for the spread of the Gospel. We call attention to the fact, however, that the new position in this discussion is that which favors a separate convention in which to deal with questions not strictly missionary. The old position, which we have acted upon from the beginning, is that the convention of the American Christian Missionary Society may consider and act upon all questions that have to do with the general interests of the brotherhood. That position has been objected to of late, and it is this objection which has raised the issue which we are now discussing. This further fact might be borne in mind, however, that the number of miscellaneous interests, more or less important, claiming attention now, are vastly greater in number than they once were. It does not follow, therefore, that if a missionary convention has been adequate in the past for all our general interests it will continue to be so indefinitely. It is possible that for a while we can get on in that way by prolonging its sessions, but the time is surely coming when a new and more effective organization for dealing with these questions will become necessary. It might not be unwise, while we are about it, to anticipate this necessity and provide for it.

Several brethren have written to express their hearty appreciation of the editorial on "Sanctification a Condition of Christian Union." We are glad to know that the editorial meets with general approval, for we believe it is the very crux of the Christian union problem. A complete consecration, on the part of Christians of all names, to the will and work of Christ, would rapidly remove all the hindrances to the unity for which Jesus prayed. In vain do we or others pray and plead for Christian union, while the interests of a party or a sect outweigh the interests of the kingdom of God. The whole of Christendom must submit itself, absolutely, to the mind of Christ before there can be unity in Him.

Editor's Easy Chair.

This is the night for the annual meeting of our circle of Easy Chair readers. Stir the fire; put on another backlog, and widen the circle, for many new faces have joined us since we last gathered in annual council. How swiftly the months have fled! This is the last night of the Old Year! "It is a time for memory, and for tears." The dying year rises before us and calls us to account for the manner in which we have spent it. In thinking over the matter certain questions have come to us as if they had fallen from the lips of the great Judge before whom we shall stand in the last day, and before whom, in a very real sense, we stand every day. Have we a clearer and truer vision of God than we had a year ago? Have we a stronger grip on Christ, and do we enjoy his companionship more than we did at the beginning of this year? Do we grasp more firmly the reality of the life eternal, as having its beginning in us already? In the power of this quickened faith do we find it easier to conquer self, resist temptation, and hold in subjection the body with its appetites and passions? Do we relish more keenly the word of God and the privilege of prayer? These are testing questions and each one may answer them to his own conscience. It is not always easy for us to see that we have made any actual progress in the spiritual life, and these questions may help us to decide whether we have been simply marking time, or whether we are really following Christ. These questions as to our attainments, imply others relating to our achievements that are perhaps more easily answered. Have we done good for evil, prayed for our enemies, conquered our tempers, controlled our tongues, practiced charity towards our neighbors, and entered the doors of opportunity which God's providence has opened to us? These questions have to do with practicing Christianity rather than with merely professing it. They will serve as the basis for a profitable meditation for each of our readers on the closing night of the Old Year.

There now! It is good to bring our lives frequently to the bar of conscience, but it is not intended that we should always live in the white light that beats upon the judgment throne. There are other voices speaking to us to-night and they, too, must be heard. Memory and Hope each has its message for us. Each of them sings to us its own sweet songs. Memory sings:

> "How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood
> When fond recollection presents them to view!
> The orchard, the meadow, the deep-tangled wildwood
> And all the loved scenes which my infancy knew."

And then there rises before our vision that dear old home, about which cluster a thousand hallowed memories. It was perhaps a very humble home, but father, mother, brothers and sisters, were there, and love, which sweetens and ennobles all life, and hallows the humblest abodes, was there. That humble cottage home rises out of the dim mists of the past, this last night of the Old Year, and fills our hearts with its holy memories. We think of those who were but are not. Some of those who started with us on life's journey have grown weary and laid down to rest. Why are we here yet? The long, toilsome journey over which we have come, stretches away behind us to the distant past. Would we go back and live it all over again? Here Hope raises her triumphant note and sings of "a land that is fairer than day," that lies "further on." And "the Father waits over the way to prepare us a dwelling-place there." No, we would not go back, for all the heart holds fondest is to be regained and enjoyed forever in the Father's house that is before us. Thank God for Memory and Hope! The one holds all the best treasures of the Past, and the other opens to us the infinite possibilities of the Future.

What are we going to do with this New Year that is soon to dawn? Shall we not try to use it as a gift from God? Shall we not seek to have the sins of the past blotted out, and make a new beginning? Some people are afraid of new resolutions and decline to make them. But how can any conscientious man, realizing his sins and mistakes in the past, avoid making new resolutions for the future? Can he deliberately compromise with sin and purposely lower his ideals to his life, instead of trying to lift up his life to his ideals? The mistake is in limiting our resolutions to New Year. Each day is a new leaf in our life-volume and each morning we should resolve with God's help to make that day better than the preceding one. But there is something impressive in the passing of an old year and the birth of a new one that strikes the imagination and causes us to realize the awful brevity of life and its deep solemnity. This fact makes it a peculiarly appropriate time for a man to look himself squarely in the face and ask himself a few plain questions about his soul's health and the tendencies of his life. Men take stock in business to see how they stand. Why should they not do so in religion? We know one prince merchant who has a skilled physician employed to call at his office at stated times and make a thorough examination of his physical condition, lest some insidious disease should make such an inroad into his system before it was detected as to shorten his life. Is it not a wiser precaution to look after the health of the spiritual man, lest sin in its insidious way undermine the soul, corrupt the heart and lead us into spiritual bankruptcy? Let us take stock.

We say "Time flies." What is time? The dictionaries can not tell you. They give you words without ideas. To say that "it is a system of those relations which one event sustains to another, as past, present or future," is not to add one iota of information to what is known by a child. We may think of it as a stream flowing by, or we may think of time as stationary, and the world and all therein as moving on. Time, one authority says, "is a measured portion of duration;" but as duration is time, that is only to say that "time is a measured portion of time!" It may be said that time is that part of eternity that is measured off into years, months and days. But years, months and days are determined by planetary revolutions. How do we know that these measurements will ever cease? What we do know is that the period of our sojourn here in the body is brief, and that our future existence is to bear a very close and vital relation to the life we are now living. Death is not the end of one being or personality, and the birth of a new one, but an event in the life of a deathless spirit whose continuity is unbroken by it. As we who pass from the Old Year into the New will not thereby lose our identity, nor be released from debts and obligations we have contracted, so the human spirit in its passage from its earthly tabernacle to its "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," does not lose its identity or change its character. Whatsoever a man sows, in the soil of his earth-life, he will reap in the field of destiny. That makes it a very solemn thing to live. And yet it makes life seem worth living. If no generous deed, no noble thought, no high aspiration, no worthy effort, no act of self-sacrifice for the true and the right, no truth gained, no victory over self, can possibly be lost, but is to bring its harvest of good through the eternal years, then, indeed, "to be living is sublime."

* * *

The hour is late and the hands on the clock point to the closing moments of the year, 1906. Soon the Old Year will be gone forever. Well, we have had a good time together, have we not, during the year that is now taking its flight? When the year was young we took you all with us on a journey to New Mexico, and together we traversed its valleys and scaled its mountains, visited some of its pueblos, noted some of its scenic attractions and climatic advantages and prophesied of its future. Later in the season you went with us to the pine woods of Michigan, where the great lake meets the forest-crowned hills, and the two pool their charms in forming an ideal summer resort. There we spent several weeks together in the delightful haunts of Garrison Park at Pentwater, keeping close to the heart of Nature, and seeking to understand something of its deeper meaning. You have gone with us to our Congress, and to our National Conventions and shared with us the glorious fellowship of these great occasions. Many a quiet chat we have had together, sometimes on the deeper things of the spiritual life, and sometimes in lighter vein. Sometimes, perhaps, the quiet waters of this department have been slightly disturbed by the waves of controversy beating on the outside, but ordinarily we have reserved the Easy Chair musings as a quiet haven where storm-tossed vessels may enter and find rest from wind and wave. You, kind readers, have been a great help to us during the year, and if the Easy Chair has brought some good cheer and strength to you in bearing your burdens, and in performing your tasks, we give thanks to Him whose help we constantly seek, that we may others bless. If you choose to journey with us another year, as we trust you all may, we shall strive to do thee good, and only good. Good-bye, Old Year! Welcome, the New!

What Lack We Yet?

By H. H. Hubbell

This is a time of great rejoicing. From the Buffalo host has come the sound of battle and the pean of victory. How it stirs the hearts of the brethren who are contending for the simple faith and obedience in the neglected fields to receive such messages of advancement and to catch a heavenly vision of brotherly fellowship in God's great work! May we not be pardoned, when surrounded with so much that hinders our cause in the west, if down in our hearts we rejoice in numbers and figures, which tell of unprecedented growth? Surely we may hear the benediction of "Well done, good and faithful servant" for what has been accomplished. This is not taking the satisfaction that our labor is ended now that victory has come to our banners, but only putting into our hearts that faith and courage which come with the realization that our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

It seems to me most appropriate that at this time our great brotherhood should come unto the Captain of our Salvation, realizing the struggle and victories of the past and in the spirit of humility and with holy desire, asking, wherein lack we yet? Like the questioner of old, we have been walking in God's commandments from our youth up. But we do not come with this question with the feeling of perfection attained. Nay, realizing our shortcomings and that we should be wholly prepared for the work whereunto God has called us, we can say with the Apostle Paul: "For to this end we labor and strive, because we have our hope set on the living God." As one of the young men of our ministry, I have ever rejoiced in the foundation work of our fathers. They were the peers among God's people and it is no slight upon their ability or devotion to the truth to say that the present hour finds us—their children in the Gospel—lacking in some things. He who is blind to his faults has no opportunity of correcting them. For more than ten years I have been trying to preach Jesus Christ to our churches in Iowa, Kansas and Idaho, and I believe I am well acquainted with their doctrine, conversation and manner of life.

In loyalty to God's word, in obedience to many of the commandments, we have led the Christian world, but, brethren, the prayer of my heart is that we should be not one whit lacking in the spiritual things of God. Not that we should rightly divide the Word or preach faith, repentance, confession and baptism the less, but that we lay a greater emphasis upon the spiritual life. In our own daily living we can well afford to take the advice of the writer of Hebrews: "Wherefore leaving the doctrine of the first principles of Christ, let us go on unto perfection." Brethren, think you that prayer, that great boon of living with God as companion, friend and helper, has its full place in the daily living? Have we but speaking acquaintance with our blessed God and Saviour Jesus Christ? When I see so many of our brethren merely tasting of God's goodness or refusing altogether to enter into the joys of spiritual fellowship, I can not help but pray that the time has come for a strong plea for a deepening of the life in Christ Jesus. What would it mean for our churches to have such a blessing? It would mean an enlargement of our hearts, one for the other. We be brethren. It would mean joy and happiness to all who love the holy cause of missions, for one can not dwell with Jesus and not catch the burden of his heart—the salvation of the world. It would mean that the church of the Lord Jesus Christ would receive such a blessing as not to be able to contain it. We would be caused to cry out with Paul in the joy of our hearts: "O the depth of the riches and the wisdom and the knowledge of God! For of him, and through him, and unto him, are all things. To him be the glory forever, Amen."

"Is There a Missing Link?"

By W. J. Wright, Cor. Sec. of the American Christian Missionary Society.

The speed of a fleet is that of its slowest vessel. Something similar, not identical, may be affirmed of the church and her organizations. The Good Shepherd keeps pace with those that can not move rapidly. He carries the feeble lambs and gives special care to the old and lame.

Herein is a lesson. Even if tastes and ability enable us to travel rapidly in perfect safety, sympathy and love constrain us to be patient and to stay in the company of those who "make haste slowly." However, if some insist on a more rapid gait, my verdict is, "They are not lost, but gone before." I have sufficient faith, charity or credulity to think of those who out-travel me, as walking in old paths, good ways, and finding rest for their souls.

I fully believe that any thoroughly representative body of our brotherhood is sane and safe; and that, call it mass meeting, convention or what you may, it will do what is right, provided time and opportunity be given for full discussion. I am not afraid of temperance resolutions because passed by a missionary society. If the mass meeting or convention should act or resolve contrary to my principles, I am not bound. I am free and will act just as if the assembly had not spoken.

But some of my brethren are afraid to trust men in a missionary convention, even though they might trust the same men in a mass meeting. For their sake, let us move slowly, and let missionary conventions be missionary only.

1. Because "This one thing I do," is a good motto even for a missionary society.

2. Because for me to enjoy my full liberty in this matter, offends my brother. For his sake I must put away what he regards as an idol.

3. Because in present conditions, for the convention to be anything more than missionary, hurts the society and retards the work of the Lord. A man offended by something said or done in a session of the American Christian Missionary Society, acts as if the offensive thing were done "by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge" of the acting board. He withdraws his support and induces others to do the same. This is like the stupid and cowardly boycott which "starves out" the preacher. The offended gains his point but the issue is not settled.

To attack one society for such a thing is to attack all, for the conventions of all the societies are made up of the same men; and a mass meeting would have the same identical constituency. The same men can not be paragons of wisdom when you call them the Foreign Society, and dolts and ninnies when you call them the Home Society. Their qualities and characters are constant. For that reason, if I may trust them at one time under one name, I can trust them at whatever time or under whatever name.

But some of the brethren do not see this. I am unwilling to offend them. If our Father can wait so long for the consummation of his plans, surely we can possess our souls in patience while gray matter grows in our heads and grace in our hearts.

Supply the missing link in a mass meeting apart from the sessions of all our societies. Let it wrangle or hold love-feasts, according to its moods. To it let the man go who would have passed a resolution of sympathy with the starving people in a fire, flood or famine-swept region, to it send the friend of temperance, education and beneficence; from it send forth the message of fraternal greeting to the M. E. conference or general assembly of Presbyterians who are in session at the same time in distant cities; for, strictly interpreted, none of these things is missionary.

And if some wise man laughs at me for my formality; if he reminds me that whatever we call ourselves for three hours, we are the identical persons who made up the various conventions; if with remorseless logic he points out that we who theoretically are the freest of all religious peoples, are in danger of binding ourselves with the cast-off chains of our religious neighbors, I am not silenced. I can answer neither his laugh nor his logic. He holds the stronger position there. But I shall say to him, "I can more easily bear your laughter, and can more easily forget your logic and warnings, than I can endure seeing the work of the American Christian Missionary Society suffer. Therefore, for the present, and until more of the brethren are convinced that liberty and loyalty will walk hand in hand, and that love will never work ill to his neighbor, let our missionary conventions be missionary and nothing more."

By Wliam Bayard Craig.

Undoubtedly we need a convention of a representative character to deal with matters of general interest outside the scope of the present missionary societies. Such a convention might not need to meet oftener than once in three years. It would be better in my judgment to organize such a convention on a more strictly representative basis than anything we now have and as such a convention might at some time wish to consider questions involving the relationship of the present societies to each other and the whole church, it would seem best that it should not be an enlarged Home Missionary Society.

The present conventions are necessarily conducted and dominated by the needs of the special work and presented as seen from that peculiar viewpoint. We need a convention organized in the interest of a viewpoint central to our whole work in all its varied aspects, that would naturally consider the happiest co-ordination of all special interests. It is high time we were considering the best means of accomplishing this desirable result.

Denver, Colo.

By S. R. Drake.

I am in favor of "a conference or congress of Christians" to convene two days before the general conventions, or in connection with the "Congress of Disciples" in which any Christian in America, or on the globe can meet and have a voice in the discussion of any and all great questions pertaining to the kingdom of heaven, that may come before such a "conference of Christians." I would prefer the word "congress" to "conference." I favor a separate organization by all means, where every Christian can become a member and have a voice in the discussion of these great questions affecting the interests of the Church of Christ.

Inspiration for Evangelization

Being the Final Part of the Address before the Buffalo Convention on "Disciples and Evangelism."

By J. P. Lichtenberger

A great tidal wave of evangelism is sweeping over the country. The Welsh revival and the Torrey and Alexander meetings in England, Australia and America have attracted world-wide attention, and quickened the evangelistic pulse. Continent-wide campaigns have been organized by several religious bodies. The readiness of the people to hear the Gospel is attested by evangelists everywhere. Dr. Hillis tells this incident to illustrate this condition. He said: "Standing in a cart a while ago, at the noon hour, I told a group of several hundred men to go on smoking while I was speaking. Do you say that these men are not interested in the great themes of God and the soul? I answer that before my 25 minute address was complete the pipes had all gone out. When I was through I saw from 200 to 400 men reach for matches, scratch them on their thighs, and light their pipes, while they stood and discussed, and talked for a few minutes before hastening back to their work."

In Brooklyn there are fifteen noon meetings with groups of from 50 to 300 men who give up thirty minutes of their noon hour to a study of the life of Christ. Recently 20,000 men in one week heard the gospel in shop meetings in the city of Cleveland. Two weeks ago 1,000 Methodist ministers and laymen met as a great committee in New York to consider plans for their winter's evangelistic campaign.

Among our own forces the situation is encouraging. All our leading evangelists are engaged for a year ahead. Our papers often report a thousand additions in the telegrams of a single issue, and the evangelistic season has scarcely opened.

Our centennial campaign arises to supply the need of the hour, to organize, to systematize, and to direct our forces. A state-wide program as in Ohio should be arranged in every state and these all marshalled in one great simultaneous, continent-wide campaign for our centennial year. Thus will it be the year of our jubilee and a million souls shall be won for the glory of our risen Lord.

Other great enterprises have been organized well worthy of our attention and effort as appropriate centennial memorials. These let us do, but not to the neglect of the one great and supreme work of the church. That which most honors the Christ and blesses the world, is not stately edifices, gorgeous rituals, or monuments made with hands, but lives won and consecrated to the cause of God and humanity.

It is the evangelistic note in all our preaching that is to save us from formalism and from crystalization. The Gospel is not a system of morals nor a theology, but a Divine Passion. The church stands hesitant on the threshold of the 20th century, (1) not because she lacks knowledge. The knowledge of the Lord covers America as the waters cover the sea. Men know the truth. Pulpit and press have not been recreant to their trust as the teachers of the people. (2) Not because she lacks opportunity. The multitudes hear the message gladly. Doors of opportunity stand wide open on every hand. The home-land is white for the harvest; the Macedonian cry has become the cry of continents; and the isles of the sea wait for his law. (3) Nor does she lack equipment. Never was the church so well organized for effective service. We have ample means and men. But the church of God is in camp. Our moral machinery is complete but it does not work. Our engine is perfect but it lacks steam. Our dynamo is installed but it fails of the current. The one thing needful is motive, passion, power! The sermon is to be "not so much an essay with a subject, as a theme with an object." The Christian is not merely to live a correct moral life but to be a vital, active force for righteousness. The church is to be, not so much a cold storage plant of correct doctrine as a power house of spiritual dynamics.

It is evangelistic fervor for the salvation of men that is to thrill the preacher and send him out to do His will on earth as it is done in heaven. Culture, education, equipment, are of value only when lit up by a holy passion to complete for men what He began to do and teach.

It is evangelistic fire that is to take the church, organized, drilled, equipped as an army with banners and hurl it with the abandon of a conquering host against the indifferent, pleasure seeking, selfish civilization of our time, not with the spirit of repression, not with the desire or hope of turning backward the march of progress, but of guiding it along the highway that leads to God.

THE ANGELS' SONG.

Into the silence of our world dropt the Angels' Song,
And the mystery and the marvel are with us long!

* * * * * *

No change of time can spoil Him of His claim—
The Son of God—but with the human name.
Love leaps to love across the loveless years,
Sobbed through with sorrows, trembled through with tears!
There is a sweetness in that song that stills
The whirlwind of our woes and soothes our ills;
Though we are slow of heart to understand
All that the Lord hath spoken; yet in every land
The Angels' Song has bent the pitying skies
A little nearer to the shepherds' eyes!

And evermore may those who listen hear
The chorus of the heavenly host who brought good cheer
To earth so long ago. And those who sought have found
The place where He was born still holy ground!
The manger and the cross, the empty grave
Are symbols of the power of Christ to save!
The world can never be the same to them
Whose hands have touched the seamless hem
Of holy garments; whose eyes have seen the vision fair
Are born of God, and such may not despair!

The Parthenogenic Controversy

By William Durban

An extraordinary sensation has been created here in England throughout the whole religious world. It has been aroused through a discussion at the annual assembly of the Congregational Union, held at Wolverhampton, the great Midland town which is a centre of the iron industry and was the scene of the ministry of the lamented and beloved Dr. Berry, who was designated by Henry Ward Beecher as his successor. The Congregationalists in Britain have of late years not given so much attention to doctrinal theology (at any rate in polemic fashion) as to evangelization and to practical church and mission enterprise amongst the masses at home. They have rivalled the Methodists in planting institutional centres and great halls for the accommodation of the working people, and have been achieving magnificent success. Yet theologically they have not been by any means inert, for I think that, as in the days of Brock, Landels, Hugh Stowell Brown, C. M. Birrell, Nathaniel Haycroft, the elder Mursell, Rosevear, Aldis, Charles Clark, Charles Stovell, Howard Hinton (with Charles Williams, Alexander McLaren, Archibald Brown, E. G. Gange, and one or two other splendid pulpit orators then in their prime, but now in the sunset years), the Baptists possessed an eclipsing galaxy of eminent preachers; so now Congregationalism is adorned with a larger number of popular ministers than any other English body. R. J. Campbell, Horton, Horne, Jowett, Barrett and Campbell Morgan certainly take the first place in popularity. No other denomination is able to match these Congregationalist preachers, although the Baptists have in the magnificent personality of Dr. Clifford, who has recently been receiving world-wide honors on attaining his 70th birthday anniversary, perhaps the most striking figure in the whole of the English Christian ministry of the day. But, though the Congregationalist ministry was never, perhaps, as brilliant as it is at this juncture, it is to the credit of the denomination that it has been for several years showing paramount solicitude about all-round practical religious efforts for the stolid and unevangelized myriads of the common people.

A Darkening Discussion.

Deep regrets prevail in the ranks of Free Churchmen in view of the strange unwisdom—as I believe most thoughtful minds consider it—of introducing into a great public conference so difficult and delicate a topic as the theological problem of the Virgin Birth. For the utmost logical confusion soon marked the debate that ensued. The occasion was opened by a fine paper on orthdox and conservative lines, by the able minister of Norwich, Dr. Barrett. Now, this East Anglian preacher is no obscurantist. He has never been reckoned amongst the ministerial fossils, but is always adding some worthy contribution to any topic that he treats with tongue or pen. But he was doubtless not a little astonished and distressed, to judge by his remarks at the close of the discussion, at the tempestuous clashing of opinions that his paper provoked. There has never, I venture to assert, occurred so momentous a controversy at a religious gathering in England, since the distressing and calamitous Downgrade discussion at the Baptist Union Assembly, raised by the vehement protests of the late C. H. Spurgeon, who seceded from the Baptist Union with the great majority of his collegians immediately after. The controversy on the Virgin Birth is not likely to cause actual disruption in the Congregational denomination, any more than in the Anglican Church, but in both bodies it is simply raging furiously as a matter of theological opinion. It is singular that the Congregationalist authorities who arranged the program of the Wolverhampton proceedings should have incorporated so difficult a problem. No better man than Dr. Barrett could have been found to deal with it. Yet he immediately had on his back, fiercely tearing at his position, some of the most noted collegiate professors and preachers present. The uttermost confusion reigned. And consternation has been spread through the churches at discovering that Congregationalist ministers, as well as instructors of ministerial students, are all at sea over this physiological and psychological problem of the New Testament. Some of the speakers took up the position, in direct opposition to Dr. Barrett, that the incarnation may be a matter of devout faith without the acceptance of the dogma of the Virgin Birth; though they were densely nebulous in attempting to explain this way of dodging the miraculous. Other clever gentlemen tried to make out that it is the resurrection, not the incarnation at all, which is doctrinally essential, seeing that Paul and the other writers of the Epistles, as well as the writers of the Acts of the Apostles, lay stress on the resurrection of Christ, not at all on his birth.

A Hideous Quagmire.

I must confess that personally I am lost in amazement at the precipitation of these undoubtedly able controversialists. It is singular indeed that they do not seem to perceive that they are in one sure and certain way playing into the hands of the most dangerous of all the modern infidels, the atheistic biologists of the school of Ernst Haeckel, who in his chair as one of the scientific professors at the University of Jena, as well as in his great and imposing books, "The Riddle of the Universe," and "Monism," has not only sought to establish the eternity of matter as an infallible dogma, eliminating all notion of any possible Creator, but has taken special pains to pour scurrilous derision on the whole doctrine of the incarnation, especially in reference to the Virgin Birth. I think that during long years of observation I have seen and heard nothing that has seemed so painful and so humiliating to the reverent Christian mind as this spectacle, and this widely circulated report of proceedings at Wolverhampton, where a number of doctors of divinity eagerly tumbled over each other in order to fling the most cherished of all Christian tenets to the hungry wolves of the notorious and ravening Jena menagerie. I was only yesterday talking with an old Baptist friend who, like myself, knew and loved C. H. Spurgeon. Said he, "It is perhaps as well, after all our mourning, that dear Spurgeon was taken away, for though he sorrowed so deeply over the recklessness of the chief promoters of the Downgrade, this new departure from the straight paths of the Puritanism that exalted England and made her great must have simply broken his heart." I will prove by "verifying my references," as Lord Salisbury exhorted us all to do, that this astounding Congregationalist escapade leads in a direction which the scalpers of a venerable dogma seemed unable to realize. In his "Riddle of the Universe" Haeckel goes out of his way to rake up an ancient fable about the Virgin Mary, concocted by blasphemous Jewish enemies of the Christian faith. This outrageous myth, ascribing dishonour to Mary in terms I dare not quote here, alleges that she became the mother of Jesus after being deceived by a Roman centurion named Panders. And Haeckel actually quotes this dastardly slander as authentic history. Even in his own country this called forth unspeakable indignation although our German cousins are fairly accustomed to heresy. On my book shelves stands beside the volumes of Haeckel the book entitled "Anti-Haeckel," written by Dr. Friedrich Loofs, professor of church history at Halle University, who is styled by Prof. Sanday, of Oxford, "that most scientific of German theologians." In withering chapters Loofs exposes Haeckel's consummate ignorance of ancient documents and his shameful recklessness in referring to fables as histories. The comparison of these two books by the Jena and the Halle professors must have been neglected by the gentlemen who rushed into the fray at Wolverhampton ready to trample both on Dr. Barrett and on the Evangelists Matthew and Luke. Otherwise they might have discovered that Haeckel was so discomfited that in a later edition he partially modified his notorious and blasphemous Chapter 17 of the "Riddle." Now, here is a new "Riddle," not of the universe, but of the "Free Churches and of Evangelical Protestantism." Where are we going? What are we likely to hear next, and who is to be the next trusted leader to betray his sacred trust? I have refrained from mentioning the names of the professors and the well-known preachers who at Wolverhampton astounded the assembly. For I do not wish this letter to be in any sense personal. But I honor and admire Dr. Barrett the more. He will stand to his guns. Lastly, is it not strange that there should be so widespread an ignorance of elementary biology amongst cultured theologians? Huxley, when asked whether he could believe in the Virgin Birth and the resurrection, replied that whatever difficulty might attach to the idea of the resurrection, there was none about the Virgin Birth, because there are among the lowest orders of creatures millions of virgin births. Parthenogenesis is the commonest of all facts low down in creation. As to the easy notion of accepting the resurrection while rejecting the miraculous element in the incarnation, this device is laughed to scorn by all infidels. The Anglican Church is distracted by this very dispute on the Virgin Birth. Last year the Rev. C. E. Beeby avowed his disbelief in the doctrine and was constrained by the bishop of Birmingham, Dr. Gore, to give up his living. Canon Henson took fire at this and vehemently denounced Bishop Gore's action, but this was sustained by an overwhelming consensus of opinion. Mr. Percy Gardner, a prominent broad churchman, steps forward and declares in defending Mr. Beeby that both the Virgin Birth and the resurrection lie right across the path of modern historic criticism. Yes, it is certain that both miracles must find credence or neither.

The Elderburg Association

CHAPTER X.

Brother Editor Tells a Frenzied Story of Fragmentary Finance.

Brother Editor, who was next on the program, was a middle-aged man whose appearance affected the beholder strangely. He somehow suggested a man at a health resort, recovering, almost recovered, from a long and wasting illness. One saw that his form was bent, but not so much so as it had been; that his cheeks were hollow, but not so hollow as formerly; that his expression was careworn, yet less careworn than of yore. He was a living hieroglyph, decipherable by all men: the ideograph for convalescence.

"You behold in me," he said, "no victim of frenzied finance, but a victim of petrified finance, paralyzed finance, idiotic, unstable, hand-to-mouth, inhuman, unblushing, scandalously inefficient and inadequate finance; finance without rhyme or reason or truth; finance the methods of which, applied to the affairs of any business concern in this land, would spell bankruptcy, sooner or later—with the odds two to one in favor of sooner.

"I keep, or rather my wife keeps a little canvas-bound book. In that book, for many years, I entered the items of my accounts with the churches where I labored. Therein may be found, in the beautiful, small, ladylike handwriting which has since become so dear to the printers in my office, entries of all items of money, meal, mutton, merchandise and milk received by me from church boards and individual Christians in payment of my salary. This book is not cherished by me as a blessed memento of my past. On the contrary, I hate the sight of it. But my wife keeps it and uses it judiciously as a whip to keep me pulling steadily in the editorial traces. For there are times when my soul is not at ease in Zion; times when I have an uncomfortable feeling that I ought to be at work preparing a sermon for Sunday. When my wife detects any symptoms of this uneasiness she gets out that old book and says: 'Dear, let us go over this together. and go back in imagination to the delightful, dead past, and recall old times and places, and play that we are preaching again.' That cures me.

"In that book are entered credits for cream, cabbages, and carrots; for potatoes, pickles and pork; for sauer-kraut, sausage and sorghum; for butter, bran and bacon; for mackerel, melons and middling-meat: all turned in on my salary, the average amount opposite each item being thirty-four and seven-eighths cents.

"I never see that book without an involuntary sinking of the heart such as I used to feel after my settlements with the board at the end of each month. I had my dreams sometimes—who has not? I used to have visions of a small surplus after settlement, enough to get my wife a pair of shoes, after paying the rent; but usually it happened that some one had turned in an account for lard, lettuce or 'lasses to the amount of eighty cents, while another had demanded credit for turnips, tomatoes, or 'taters—items which had eluded the drag net of my book-keeping. In these particulars, however, the associations are with things painful rather than with things disastrous; they are connected with the days when I was young and tender-hearted, too apt to sympathize with the hard-times plaint of the churches. As to these particulars, also, the experiences, while painful, were perhaps not unwholsome. Once I heard a preacher say, 'If the Lord will keep me humble, my congregation will keep me poor.' I amend that by saying, 'If the congregation will keep me impoverished, the Lord need not bother about keeping me humble: the humiliation will take care of itself.' The book is not only associated with things painful, but it has its chapters of disaster.

"I was called to the work at Spickspan. A pretty little village, with a pretty little church, a pretty little organ and a pretty little choir. They had a pretty little standard set for their preacher, as to manners, social qualities, pulpit ability, and dress for himself and family: for which they paid the pretty little salary of $800 a year. It was an 'up-to-date' little church, but it was seldom quite on-date with the cash for its pastor's salary. Quite abreast of the times in choir music, but away behind time with the preacher's stipend. Yet in any commercial agency this congregation would be rated solvent, able to make good its contracts. Moreover, it boasted, with good reason, that it had never allowed a pastor to leave there with his salary unpaid. Bear in mind the fact that this congregation was solvent. Bear in mind, also, the facts that my work was acceptable to the people and that the church really prospered under my care, except in one particular.

"My arrangement with the board was for monthly settlements. After the first few months, payments fell behind, and from that on to the end of the year there was seldom a time when the amount those people owed me was not considerable. The money came in driblets.

"Under a system like that it was necessary for me to go in debt for the necessaries of life. Naturally, the people with whom these debts were contracted asked for their money when I did not, after a reasonable time, pay without asking. I need not point out to intelligent men like you all the elements of danger there is in the deadly store account for necessaries; how the debt exceeds the expectations and intentions of the debtors; how, especially, the driblet income is fatally inadequate to the meeting of financial obligations of any considerable amounts. I am making no excuse for my own mistakes, understand, or for any carelessness or lack of business capacity I may have shown in the management of my own affairs. If there were faults of my own I paid for them at last, in currency, and in heartache and humiliation. There may be here or there a Napoleon of finance who can husband the penny and hoard the nickel until the driblet becomes a full-sized drib, big enough to discharge the largest store account; and also there may be here and there a housewife who can borrow a bucket of water from the rain-barrel, replacing it at last with water caught in a pint cup held under the drippings of the eaves: the one task is as easy as the other; but I am equal to neither. I do not mind admitting that I am not a Napoleon of finance.

"When the duns came—and they began at last to come thick and fast—what was I to do if I had not the money to pay? For my reputation's sake I must give some reason for failure to pay; and for my soul's sake I could give no reason but the true one. Invariably, almost, I would tell the bill-collector the church owed me more than enough to pay: and in every instance I would make an honest effort to collect the money. It was inevitable that the owners of accounts would investigate, at last; they would go to leading members of the congregation and ask if the church owed me money; and they would casually remark that they had a small account, which, etc., etc. This would perhaps annoy the members. The disastrous thing, however, was the fact that the private affairs of the preacher, and the financial affairs of the congregation became at last matters of common gossip on the street.

"When shall I forget that bitterest day of my life when the elders called on me in a body and remonstrated with me about my debts? A man to whom I owed a bill to the amount of thirty dollars had complained to them. This, taken in connection with previous complaints from others, had caused them to investigate, and they had gone about town and had ascertained from various sources the gross sum of my obligations. In the aggregate, that sum was rather large, yet not beyond my resources, if my people would only be prompt in meeting their obligations to me. At that moment they owed me enough to discharge one-half of my indebtedness; the other half was not beyond my means to pay, with economy on my part and promptness on the part of the church; and my creditors were reasonable men, personally friendly to me.

"I shall never forget the pain of that hour. I had tried to lead a harmless, cleanly life, there as elsewhere, and I could not but feel the humiliation keenly. It was then that I showed those elders my book—the dear little, canvas-covered book which my wife guards under lock and key to keep me from burning it. I showed them how, in one year, they had paid me more than 50 per cent of my salary in sums of less than ten dollars: in average payments of less than seven dollars. I asked them to tell me, if they could, what would happen to any business firm in that town if it should adopt, in the management of its financial affairs, the business methods in use in that church. I reminded them that I had a family to support; that I had children to house, clothe, feed and educate; and that I was expected to house and clothe them at least in a manner that would not make the people ashamed of their pastor.

"You imagine, I presume, that this board, after this interview, speedily amended its financial methods. Well, you are wrong. They did no such thing. It is true that, by a special effort, they managed to pay me what they then owed, but after that they went on in the same old hand-to-mouth way. At the end of the year they asked for my resignation. They mercifully deadened the effect of this blow by telling me that while I had been a good pastor, I had proved a poor financier etc., etc. It cost me one hundred dollars to move to the next field.

"In the next field I made an iron-clad, triple-plated, steel-riveted rule to the effect that rather than go in debt for the necessaries of life, we would live on bread and water. These sunken cheeks and hollow eyes, brethren, witness my stern adherence to that rule. There have been days in my home when the phrase 'bread and water' was no mere poetical figure of speech. In that last church I demanded a certain stipulated sum of cash each week, for housekeeping expenses; settlement in full at the end of each month. Sometimes, especially when the Sunday collections were good, I got the stipulated amount on Monday. Sometimes I got half; sometimes less than half. Yet the Lord gave me strength of purpose to adhere to my iron-clad, etc., rule. I have spent a whole week, neglecting all other business, trying to secure from the treasury, each day, enough to keep me in provisions until the next day. A rainy Sunday was a calamity to our household, invariably. I have gone to the officers of that church feeling like a beggar, when I was merely asking them to procure for me enough of my hard-earned salary to keep my family from actual hunger.

"It may be that you are saying to yourselves that I am a bad financier; that a man with any management need not live in this hand-to-mouth way. Say what you will, I am not posing as a Morgan or Rockefeller. Nevertheless I have done very well since I quit the pulpit. In that last church my salary was $20 per week. I left it to do the work of reporter for a small daily newspaper at a salary of $15 per week. The newspaper, fortunately, was solvent, so that I got that $15 every Saturday. Big difference in salary, you think. Yes; the difference between hope and despair, between success and failure, between plenty and want: and the difference is in favor of the $15 paid promptly every Saturday night.

"I admit that my experiences may be exceptional. I may be a poorer financier than the average preacher of my class; and the churches I have named may not be, in money matters, representative of their class.

"I wish to say in conclusion that but for my children I should never have given up the work. It was Chesterfield, I think, who said that his intimacy with the ways of the world had disgusted him with life. He had been behind the scenes; had smelt the cheap tallow-candles that illuminate them; had seen the dirty ropes and pulleys that move them. It is not true, I am glad to know, that preachers' children are worse than the children of other people. Yet if it were true, it could be explained, if it could not be excused. If there is a seamy-side to church life preachers' children are in a way to discover it. All the pettiness, the childishness, the squabbling, the little sordid selfishness that manifest themselves in the affairs of congregations are likely to become known to the pastor's children. They are more or less behind the scenes, so that if there are any rank-smelling candles or dirty ropes and pulleys, they see them; and it may well be that their young, immature minds can not make the right, kindly allowance for such things. As my own children grew up I began to fear that they might come to believe that, in the church life, Christians are forever forcing their pastors to choose between debt, duns and disgrace, on the one hand, and a permanent diet of bread and water, for themselves and their families, on the other. In the heyday of youth there is always danger of rash judgment.

"I am prospering very well, now, as editor and owner of the Elderburg Timbrell."

What the Brethren are Saying and Doing

By B. B. Tyler

The Editor of The Christian-Evangelist has said a good many excellent things, on a live question, in his book just from the press of the Christian Publishing Company on "Christian Union." It is a meaty book. I read and relished every word in its more than two hundred pages on a train yesterday afternoon between Denver and Colorado Springs. This is the most practical testimony I can give of my appreciation of the things that Brother Garrison says on the problem of union in this latest product of his brain and pen. Christian union is in the air. It is in the air because it is in the minds and hearts of a multitude of Christly men and women as never before. This is the time, therefore, to speak on the subject sanely and sweetly. And this is what Brother Garrison has done in this volume. It is a thought-provoking and quotable book.

Many influences have been at work during the last third of a century to bring those who believe in the Christ into closer fellowship. The following is a partial list: The uniform Sunday-school lesson system, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the work of evangelization in non-Christian lands, the American Bible Society, the American Tract Society, the American Sunday-school Union, the action of the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal church some years ago, with the discussion to which it gave rise, the Christian Endeavor movement, and the persistent discussion of the union question by the Disciples of Christ. In season, out of season, in private and in public, with tongue and with pen, formally and informally, wisely and unwisely, the Disciples have insisted that schism is a sin, and that Christians must unite on Christ, in Christ, under Christ, in order to receive the blessing of the Head of the Body leading on to the successful evangelization of the world. There is no way of estimating accurately and fully the influence of the Disciples in bringing about the present state of mind on the part of the public in respect to this, as Mr. Bryan would say, "paramount issue." There is no great danger that the average Disciple will under-estimate this influence. J. H. Garrison certainly does not; yet, he gives credit to others for what they have done. He, of course, believes in "federation" as an influence coming to the front, the effect of which will mightily promote the unity and union for which our dear Lord fervently prayed. I have been federated for so long a time, and so happily, that I find it difficult to understand why any person who claims to be a Christian should oppose federation. There is reason at the present time to thank God and take courage. The Church of the First Born is putting itself in order, that it may move forward in the conquest of the world. This little book, circulated and read, will promote this good cause.

Francis E. Clark, D. D., the originator of the Christian Endeavor movement, has recently given to the world the book entitled, "Christian Endeavor in All Lands." This is a fascinating book. It contains nearly 200 half-tone engravings, portraits, and etchings. This is a well-told story of a great movement, "for Christ and the church," which has spread over all the earth from a small beginning in America, about twenty-five years ago. The Christian Endeavor societies literally encircle the earth. Dr. Clark tells the story of this wonderful movement in fine style. There are more than 600 pages in this book. If you are interested in Christian union you can not afford to pass this record by. It is difficult for the Disciples to put their "plea," or their "position," in a single sentence, better than it is put in the first, and principal sentence in the Christian Endeavor pledge, "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ, for strength, I promise him," etc. The Endeavorer is brought face to face with Jesus Christ as Lord. A sincere, true, intelligent, practical recognition of the Lordship of Jesus Christ will solve all puzzling problems. Let any person, or any people, begin by recognition, practically, of the supreme and sole authority and sufficiency of Jesus Christ—the result need not be feared.

Was it not Alexander Procter, "one of our own brethren," who said:

"Put Christ in your temple, and whatever ought not to be there will depart at his bidding. Is your congregation disturbed by the presence of birds or beasts that defile it. Open the door to him and give him full possession, for he alone has power to drive them out. Is the temple of your heart infested with the beasts of selfishness, which show their presence in the works of the flesh? You can not expel them by your will alone. Put Christ in your temple."

"There are those who are vainly trying to cleanse the temple of its falsehood by a scourge of small cords of doctrine spun out of their own brain. * * * There are not wanting those who are seeking to cleanse their own lives by their law-keeping in their own strength. Put Christ in your temples, and whatever ought not to be there he will drive out."

This is the language of Alexander Procter endorsed by Isaac Errett. Herein is the solution of the union problem, and of all the other problems that vex humanity and the church.

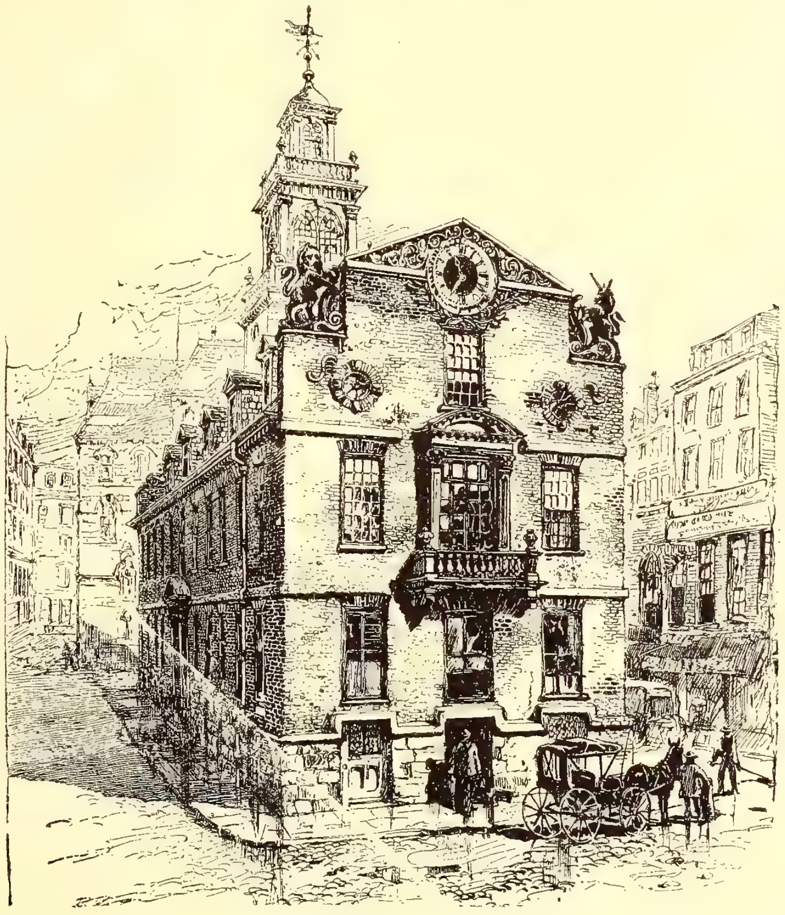
Boston and C. E.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

A trip to Boston is always somewhat of an event in any man's life. Last week I was at "the Hub," and found the universe spinning around it with usual fuss and rattle, while it serenely holds its own and suffers the universe to enjoy this honor. Bunker Hill Monument, and the great Public Library with its 1,000,000 volumes, and the Old State House with its statues and paintings and memorials and volumes of history are still here. Boston Common, an ancient "trayning field and for the feeding of cattell," where they put to death witches in 1648, '56 and '60, and Quakers, Indians and prisoners of war, from the branch of the great elm; where they fought duels, and where Whitefield held his great meetings; where common scolds were punished by ducking in the Old Frog Pond which never was known to have a frog in it; where John Hancock had Rachel Wall executed on the charge that "Rachel Wall on the 18th day of March, 1789, at Boston, on the public highway, attacked Margaret Bender and with bodily force seized and put on the bonnet of said Bender at the value of 7 shillings. This did she carry away against the public peace of the commonwealth." Boston Common with all its story is still here. Faneuil Hall, the Cradle of Liberty, looks as it did in 1762 with some reconstruction. Healy's picture of "Webster's Reply to Hayne," with its 130 portraits, still looks down upon the visitor and scores of other faces. The Massachusetts State Grange was in session and I looked in upon "the embattled farmers," being something of a granger myself. They had the air of their ancestors, to whom Captain Parker, that April day in 1775, at Lexington, said: "Stand your ground. Don't fire unless fired upon. But if they mean to have a war, let it begin here." The gilded grasshopper on the cupola of the building, under which the farmers were deliberating, is the original one of 1742, reconstructed and rejuvenated. This was fashioned from sheet copper by the "cunning artificer," Deacon Shendroune immortalized by Hawthorne in "Drowne's Wooden Image." The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company has its armory above the hall and one sees there many relics of colonial, provincial, and revolutionary times. Eighteen of their flags show the colonial colors, the oldest having been carried in 1663. Quincy market is here, and as I strolled through it, the Christmas holiday dress was on, and wreaths, flower bells, holly and mistletoe and thousands of Christmas trees from Maine and Vermont, and all over New England were on exhibition.

The old churches after all, however, are the most interesting things here except the people, and the beans and brown-bread, and other deities. Christ Church is the most ancient. On a tablet one reads: "The signal lanterns of Paul Revere displayed in the steeple of this church, April 18, 1775, warned the country of the march of the British troops to Lexington and Concord." Here is a communion set presented by George II in 1732 and an organ imported from London in 1759 and beside the organ is a gallery built for the use of slaves. The chimes were the first used in America. A number of British officers killed at Bunker Hill are interred here. Kings Chapel is another old shrine. In 1689 the authorities compelled the town to tolerate, and provide a place for, those who desired to worship according to the ritual of the Church of England, and here in a small frame church the royal governors and British officers were provided with pews, and services were conducted with great pomp. This went hard with the old puritan. It had the hour glass on the pulpit to mark the length of the sermons, and still has the high-back pews and lofty pulpit with winding stairs. It is now a Unitarian church.



THE OLD STATE HOUSE, BOSTON.

Old South Meeting House is the most interesting of these antiques. It is built on the site of Winthrop's home on a corner of the famous Milk street. The first meeting house was built in 1670 where Benjamin Franklin was christened January 17, 1706. He was born just across the street at No. 17. In 1730 the present structure was erected. The congregation moved to the New Old South. Twenty-five women organized the Old South Preservation Committee, and purchased it when about to be torn down, and it is now a museum. The tea party was organized and started from the door of the Old South. Judge Sewall, who burned the witches publicly, expressed his contrition for the deed here in 1697. Warren made his address from its pulpit after the Boston massacre, coming in through the window behind the desk. In the museum are countless relics of Indian and colonial and revolutionary times, and whole volumes of the old time sermons, dry enough, many of them, the first preached in Boston, and the writing as clear and legible as if written ten years ago. The longest word in Elliot's Indian Bible, which I noted here, will delight the intelligent compositor. It is in Mark 1:40, and for the English "kneeling down to him," and is this: Wutappesittukqussunnookwehtunkquoh. How Mr. Evarts would have rolled that trippingly on his tongue! By the way, I have one on Boston. I observed on their printed cards in the Old South the statement that "the Father of his Country" addressed the people there and had to come through the window to the platform, so great was the pressure of the people to see and hear him. Passing out I said to the lady in charge: "Have you any evidence that General Washington ever spoke in this building?" "Why, no sir, he never spoke here." "Well," said I, "here is your printed declaration to that effect." "Let me see it," said the lady. "Gracious, that's awful! I will correct it at once." Here is a call for the D. A. R. and at the Hub itself.

But my business was not to set Boston right on its own history, but to attend a meeting of the executive committee of the trustees of Christian Endeavor. It was a delightful privilege to meet with the leaders at Tremont Temple at the Christian Endeavor headquarters. My visit convinced me of their need of a new building. So far $35,000 have been contributed for this purpose. Secretary Vogt having resigned, our special work was to select his successor. Mr. William Shaw was unanimously chosen. Mr. Shaw has for twenty years been the treasurer of the United Society. In this office he has been greatly successful. He is thoroughly imbued with the Christian Endeavor spirit. He is universally popular in Christian Endeavor circles. He combines with sound judgment and excellent administrative ability a devout character and a full knowledge of the history and principles and genius of the Endeavor movement. To us there seemed no other name to suggest itself and we feel our action will meet with universal approval.

Mr. Vogt has done good service. In his three and a half years we have gained a net increase of 5,000 societies. The figures are now 67,811 societies. He retires of his own choice to take a position with the Home Society of the Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Clark leaves January 19 for an extended tour in South America. Beginning in Jamaica he will visit the new Costa Rica Union, and after holding a number of meetings in the canal zone, will visit for several months the workers in the different South American republics, closing in Brazil in May. Everything is hopeful at headquarters. A new assistant secretary will be chosen. Mr. Hiram Lathrop, of Boston, becomes treasurer and two new departments of work will soon be opened. Merry Christmas to all Christian Endeavorers and all readers of The Christian-Evangelist.

A Specimen of "Modern Courtesy"

It will be remembered that a short time ago I had a friendly discussion with "The Christian Standard" with respect to the historical position of the fathers of our religous movement with special reference to the question of federation. During that discussion "The Christian Standard" charged Brother Garrison with contending that Pedobaptist churches are "Scriptural" churches. This I emphatically denied, and went so far as to say that if the "Christian Standard" would quote from Brother Garrison's writings anything he had ever said even like that, I would at once publicly repudiate his position and help the "Christian Standard" to break down his influence. At the same time the "Christian Standard" intimated that my position was the same as that of Brother Garrison. When the "Christian Standard" replied to me, it suggested that I was not competent to speak for Brother Garrison, and still clearly intimated that I was mistaken with regard to his position, though not a single line or word was quoted to justify any such intimation. The discussion was just about to close, but I thought it was only fair to all parties that my representation of Brother Garrison should be fully sustained before the readers of the "Christian Standard." With this view I wrote to Brother Garrison, asking him whether I had fairly represented his position or not. To this inquiry I received the following:

> "Replying to your question, whether you have correctly represented my position in your reply to the 'Christian Standard,' I would say, most certainly you have. I have myself declined to deny a charge so manifestly absurd as that which you have denied for me. Do I need to deny for the benefit of Disciples of Christ that I hold and teach that Pedobaptist churches are 'Scriptural,' while holding to infant baptism, affusion and creed-prescription? What then would be the meaning and mission of our reformatory movement? Is it not a self-evident truth to every unbiased mind that all churches—our own included—are 'Scriptural' only as they conform to the teaching and life of Christ, and that they are un-scriptural to the extent that they depart from his example and teaching? So I believe, and I have therefore not felt called upon to deny, for our readers, statements which I felt sure the brethren would properly estimate. I must do the brethren the justice to say that not one of them, so far as I now recall, has ever written to me to know whether the statements which you deny for me were actually true. From this I infer that they were not taken seriously."

When I received Brother Garrison's letter I wrote to the "Christian Standard," incorporating so much of his letter as is contained in the preceding paragraph, and suggested to the "Christian Standard" that I thought that this final statement ought to be made in order to level up everything in our discussion.

After waiting several weeks for my article to appear, I wrote to the "Christian Standard" and enclosed a stamp asking that my article should be returned. To my request no attention was paid whatever. After waiting some considerable time I again addressed a letter to the "Christian Standard" asking for the return of my manuscript. I still received no answer. I then wrote a private letter to Brother Errett, asking him to give his personal attention to the matter, and see that my manuscript was returned, but for some reason he has not replied, and so I am shut up to the necessity of making this explanation through the columns of The Christian-Evangelist.

Now one reason why I was anxious for the "Christian Standard" to publish my letter was that during my discussion with the "Christian Standard" I received many intimations that the main reason of the "Christian Standard's" position was to be found in its hostility to Brother Garrison. I was anxious for it to vindicate itself from this charge by publishing Brother Garrison's repudiation of the position which the "Christian Standard" had ascribed to him. As the "Christian Standard" refuses to publish my article, I fear that many brethren will now feel justified in the suspicion which they entertained. I regret this exceedingly, for my whole purpose in writing the articles I did was to bring about an irenicon between brethren who ought to be as one in the advocacy of our great cause. I must now leave the matter for others to judge as to whether the "Christian Standard's" "courtesy" is what the Apostle Paul would call Christian or not.

W. T. Moore.

P. S.—After sending the foregoing to the Christian-Evangelist I received the following letter from Russell Errett:

> Cincinnati, O., October 6, 1906.
> Mr. W. T. Moore, Columbia, Mo.:
> Dear Brother Moore—Your note received, and I find you have blamed Brother Lord for what is due to my own delinquency. On taking the matter up with him again, he thinks it best to publish your article, and will do so the coming week, without reply, but with a small editorial explanation.
> Trusting that you will prefer this to the return of the manuscript, as you request, I am,
> Faithfully yours, Russell Errett.

It will be seen that this letter was written October 6, before our National Convention at Buffalo. At Buffalo I reminded Brother Lord that my article had not yet appeared as had been promised. He said that Brother Errett had gone off some place, and that this was why my article had not appeared, as he had promised, but that it would appear very shortly. I waited until last week, when I wrote Brother Errett another letter, telling him that he had failed to comply with his promise, and that I now felt compelled to publish some explanation of the matter if I did not hear from him by telegram at once. Several days have already passed since I wrote this letter, and I have not received either telegram or anything else with respect to the matter. I now feel that I can wait no longer, and I must leave the general public to decide upon the treatment I have received.

The correspondence has developed at least one feature which was already assured to myself, but which was perhaps not suspected by the general public. That feature is that J. A. Lord is not the responsible editor of the "Christian Standard," and that he did not write the articles in reply to mine that appeared in the "Christian Standard." I understood this matter from the beginning, and now Brother Errett's letter practically acknowledges that he has been responsible for the "Christian Standard's" part of the controversy with me. I state this fact because I want the public to understand the whole truth in this case. Brother Errett conducted the controversy in the main with skill and courtesy, and I want him to have the credit for his work, and now that he has refused to admit to his columns my article vindicating Brother Garrison, I want the blame to rest where it belongs.

W. T. M.

Columbia, Mo., November, 1906.

[We give place to the foregoing regretfully, because it refers to a discussion that is now in the past. We do so, however, at the request of Brother Moore, whose whole aim, as he says, has been to bring about a better understanding between brethren, and who feels that its publication is due to the brotherhood, who are entitled to a knowledge of the facts therein stated. We must take this occasion to say, however, that for the editor of the "Christian Standard" we have none but the kindest feeling, personally, and we do not judge his motive in making statements that seemed to fair-minded brethren to do us serious injustice. For us the incident is closed, and we assure the editor of the "Christian Standard" that nothing will give us more satisfaction than that we should be able to co-operate, as the two papers once did, in the furtherance of our common cause and in promoting the peace and unity of the brotherhood.—Editor.]

Our Budget

—Farewell, Old Year, a long farewell!

—How often Pilate's words recur to us at this season, "What is written, is written!"

—The year's deeds have gone to record, and no power in the universe can change that record.

—Let that solemn and impressive fact be kept in memory as we begin the record of the New Year.

—Suggestion to readers: The more thoroughly you read your paper the more profit you will get out of it and the deeper will be your attachment to it.

—Suggestion to writers: Let us all be briefer the coming year. Boil down, down, down! There's a great demand in this office for column and half column articles.

—Our assistant editor will be gray long before the time if he be compelled to use his blue pencil, as he is doing now, much longer. Help him by leaving out half your words.

—We have a great many rare good things on hand and in mind for the coming year, and the shorter the articles you write, the more of these special features will appear. More writers and shorter articles is our motto for 1907.

—The article which appears on the opposite page from W. T. Moore, is one that we have held in type since before the Buffalo Convention, the article to which he refers having been sent to Cincinnati about five months ago. After Brother Moore had given up the matter of getting that article in the "Standard," we personally wrote to Brother Lord asking whether he was going to publish the article, as in that case we did not care to do it, as it relates to a discussion conducted in the "Christian Standard." He replied that they would publish it soon; but as three issues of the paper have since appeared, without the article, Brother Moore feels we ought not to wait longer, and, desiring to close this matter up with the year, without carrying it over into the new, we give place to it this week, and, so far as we are concerned, this must end the matter.

—We have in type a lengthy report of Scoville's recent meeting received too late for this week's "make-up."

—The brethren at Lafayette, Ind., recently burned a mortgage for $800, while bank notes were placed in the hands of the treasurer to meet another mortgage for $2,100. For over nine years the church has only been able to pay the interest on these mortgages. Within the last 28 months the membership has increased from 200 to 500. A. W. Connor is the pastor, and with the load just lifted the members have great hope for the future.

—John Kendrick Ballou has been asked by the church at Sioux City, Ia., to remain indefinitely. During his two years of service with them a neat house of worship has been erected. The church is fast becoming one of the leading churches in this city of forty congregations. A tabernacle campaign is planned for next autumn, the best site in town having been selected by Brother Muckley. The present building will be enlarged, it is hoped, in time for this special forward move.

—F. R. Liddell writes us that since M. H. Garrard took charge of the work at LaPorte, Ind., the beginning of September, there has been a new interest, the attendance increasing and the membership being thoroughly united. Brother Liddell has been with this church for eleven years and says he cannot recall a time that the outlook was more promising. Preparations are being made for a special meeting to begin January 13, the pastor to do the preaching and Arthur L. Haley, singing evangelist, to assist.

—Harold Bell Wright, of Lebanon, Mo., has received a call to Redlands, Cal., and will enter upon that work not later than February 1. Brother Wright makes the change for health reasons, it being thought that the climate of Southern California will suit him better than that of the Ozark hills. He stopped off and visited The Christian-Evangelist office during a recent visit to Chicago, where he has made arrangements for the publication of his new novel which will appear next autumn. "That Printer of Udell's," has had a very large sale and is now being published in a cheap edition. The assistant editor had the pleasure of having Brother Wright read to him the manuscript of his new book while on a camping expedition together in the Missouri hill country. The story is an interesting one and its author has grown in his craftsmanship. We have every confidence that Redlands will be delighted with the minister, whom we shall be very sorry to lose from Missouri. We have Brother Wright's promise that he will write for The Christian-Evangelist during the coming year.

A Campaign at Bloomfield, Ia.

A great effort in the interest of Christian union and New Testament Christianity will be made in Iowa at the beginning of the year, and the Christian church at Bloomfield will be among those to begin on Sunday, January 6. The pastor, F. D. Ferrall, will be assisted by Evangelist

H. A. Northcutt.

H. A. Northcutt, of Knox City, Mo., who is doing some of the best evangelistic work in our country. He has held meetings in many states of the Union and is well-known in Bloomfield, as he was for several years the efficient pastor of this church. Nor does he need an introduction as evangelist, for twice he has held interesting meetings there and led hundreds to Christ. He is the type of evangelist who unifies and who leaves no unpleasant things behind him. With forces well organized and the meeting well advertised the brethren have great faith that they will get and be a blessing. H. A. Northcutt comes fresh from other victories to this church with a building holding more than one thousand people, with a splendid chorus choir, and a consecrated pastor and membership. The citizens of Bloomfield will be welcomed during the week nights as well as on the Lord's day.

[Since this page was "made up" comes the news of the death of Brother Northcut, as announced on another page.—Editor.]

A Special Offering for Reconstruction Work in San Francisco and Vicinity.

BY G. W. MUCKLEY.

A joint letter has been sent out by the American Christian Missionary Society and the Board of Church Extension, the appeal being in harmony with the recommendation of the National Convention at Buffalo, which urged that a special offering be taken by the two boards, adopting such measures as they deemed best. After a meeting of both boards in which certain recommendations were made there was a meeting in Kansas City of the Board of Church Extension at which W. J. Wright, secretary of the American society, and Dr. R. L. Rigdon of San Francisco, chairman of the Reconstruction Commission, were present, and it was Resolved, That the acting board of the American Christian Missionary Society unite with the Board of Church Extension in raising a special fund to be used as a donation for evangelization and the rebuilding of churches in San Francisco and vicinity. All funds to be forwarded to the acting board of the American Christian Missionary Society at Cincinnati, Ohio. After the payment of expenses incurred by both boards in raising such funds, the net proceeds thereof to be equally divided; one-half to be used for evangelistic purposes, where the California Reconstruction Commission shall request, with the approval of the acting board of the American Christian Missionary Society, and one-half to be used for rebuilding churches, where the California Reconstruction Commission shall request, with the approval of the Board of Church Extension. The funds for each individual case of need are to be forwarded to the California Reconstruction Commission by said Boards, and be expended by said Commission.

Previous to the fire our people had taken on new life as a result of our national convention meeting in San Francisco in 1905. All their plans have been shattered. It is now nearly nine months since the fire. Dr. Rigdon, chairman of the Reconstruction Commission, says thousands are still living in tents and in shanties. Immediately after the fire our sympathies compelled us to send money, food and clothing. Now, as always, the church comes last with its plea that our Zion be restored. Because the appeal of God comes last shall it lose its effect? God forbid.

Our Reconstruction Commission at San Francisco is composed of wise and godly men appointed by the Northern California State Convention. It remains now for our churches to do their duty on the first or second Sunday of January and send such offerings as will enable us to put our work on a respectable footing at San Francisco. Other religious bodies are providing new buildings on a liberal scale. Now is our opportunity to demonstrate for Christ's sake and for Christ's Plea that we love the cause for which we stand so well, that we will, once for all, do things worthy of a great people with a great plea. Send all offerings to The American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

H. A. Northcutt's Labors Ended.

Mexico, Mo., Dec. 20, 1906.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON: Say through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to the great host that knew and loved Bro. H. A. Northcutt, that his earth labors are done. He reached Mexico Tuesday afternoon, having closed his meeting with M. M. Goode at St. Joseph Monday night. I met him by chance at the train. I thought he was looking well. He came to rest a few days with his only daughter, Mrs. E. R. Locke, took ill Tuesday night and died at 1:30 p. m., Wednesday afternoon, December 19. The physician says death came from heart failure, as a result of an overwrought and thoroughly exhausted nervous system. He was a princely man. His life was a benediction. His labors as an evangelist eminently successful. His heart was richly endowed with love, and his mind stored with the Scriptures. He was an example of his oft-repeated exhortation to others, "be thou faithful unto death." He has the crown.

Assisted by Brothers Headington and A. A. Wallace, the Presbyterian minister, we conducted a very sweet, though sad service here to-day, and then they took the body to Knox City for interment by the side of his wife, deceased over thirty years ago. A. W. KOKENDOFFER.

[The foregoing announcement will bring sorrow to the heart, and tears to the eyes of thousands of the devoted friends of this loving and loveable evangelist. He was a sort of forerunner among us of that type of evangelists of which there are now many, who know how to preach Christ both loyally and lovingly. Of him it may be said, as it was written of Barnabas: "He was a good man, full of the Holy Spirit and of faith, and much people was added to the Lord." He was a true "son of consolation," and his name will long remain as a sweet fragrance in the memory of thousands whose lives have been blessed by his ministry. We share the sorrow of all who mourn his departure, and our sincere sympathy is extended to his loving daughter.—Editor.]

Evangelize Iowa.

All Iowa is awake! There are great possibilities for the plea of the Disciples in Iowa. We are entering upon a state-wide campaign. Possibly more than 250 evangelistic meetings will be conducted this season. The offerings to state work are large. I have a tract of practical suggestions on, "How to Have a Revival," also cards and advertisemnts used in our meetings to great advantage. If you would like some of these for "pointers," I will send them for five cents in stamps. They may be suggestive.

Following Dewey's Victory.

"The Way of Reconciliation," is the title of a bi-monthly paper published in Vigan, Ilicos, Sur., Philippine Islands, by Hermon P. Williams, our missionary to those islands. We have been interested in several things in it. Here is a report of conversions:

"Baptisms are reported as follows: Laoag, 17; Aparri, 14; Canayon, 11; Tallungan, 7; Paruddan, 8; Pilar 2; Bangued, 1; Vigan, 1; San Ildefonso, 1; Cabugao, 19."

Mrs. Beulah Williams reports the following:

"A class for Bible women was undertaken last month at Vigan. Justa Oliva and Teodora Isbarra came down from Sinait to study the Bible under my instruction. The congregation of which they are members is one of the most faithful in Ilocos Sur. Ruperto Inis, one of the evangelists there, loaned them his ox and cart for the trip. Their neighbors, not of the congregation, asked them what wages they would receive. 'A clearer knowledge of God's word, nothing more,' Teodora answered; but they would not believe her."

These women, after their Bible course was completed, went back home, Mrs. Williams says, to begin teaching there. "Teodora was intending to start a children's class at Sinait, and Justa a class for women, each to meet three times a week.

This item then, too, will be read with interest:

"The following letter was received not long ago from a distant town in Ilocos Sur.—I have been, Sir, for a short time a subscriber to the paper 'Dalan Ti Cappia,' and during these past few months for the first time I have examined the 'New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ,' which was loaned by Sr. Esteban Paredes, correspondent of this paper. Through earnest reading the light has come quickly to me, to my darkened mind. Here now I am, repentant of my many sins. I believe in Christ. And that my evil deeds may be cleansed or wiped out, once for all, and that I may be saved send me, Sir, a John Batoc (Dipper), that I may be buried with Christ my Lord.

"Yours, desirous of entering into the new life,
"ANTONIO ACOSTA."

These are some of the indirect results of Dewey's victory in Manila Bay. "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform."

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

One Hundred Words from Moulton, Ia.

We began our meeting November 18 and closed December 5 with 54 additions—37 confessions, 15 by letter and statement, and two reclaimed. Our meeting closed earlier than we had expected because of the illness of Evangelist Arthur Stout. One other church here just closed a three weeks' meeting with nine additions. They are equipped as well as we, in some particulars, better, having a good minister and splendid people. I can see no other reason for our larger success than our plea, the world-winning plea of unity on Christ. Let's be worthy of God's greater blessings.

Nelson Trimble, minister.

From Idaho.

Two confessions, at Star. One baptism in Boise river. The church there is to be dedicated during the last days of December and will be free of debt. On the parsonage there will be one hundred dollars debt.——At Emmett we are moving the church building a few blocks to the permanent location. A protracted series of sermons will doubtless begin about January 10, and continue indefinitely, or until a resident minister is called.——At Arcadia arrangements are being made for Brother Clore, of the Caldwell laity to preach each Lord's day. The Oregon state board is being asked to stand a part of the car-fare for these services. Only a few workers can be mustered at Arcadia. B. W. Rice.

Violett-Clarkson Meeting.

Lorain is a city of 30,000 where twenty-seven languages are spoken. There are 130 saloons. Catholics predominate, with eight churches. Of the Protestant bodies the Methodists are strongest, having four churches with resident pastors. Commercialism has so taken hold of the people in this rapidly-growing city that ministers all wished that something might be done to arouse interest in the work of the churches.

Our church ranked third among the Protestant bodies in strength. In cleanness of life and freedom from the modern popular sins it stands first. The membership was 150. The building is practically new, is well located, but has a debt of $4,000. The seating capacity is 500. An effort has been made to cut out all paid socials and circus methods of raising money. The past year has seen none of it and all bills have been paid though the budget increased. The church had six months of preparation. A revival association was formed, the purpose of which was to raise funds and to create interest in every way possible. More than half the money was raised before the meeting. A hopeful list was gathered, but not as large as expected. Conferences were held between the evangelist and pastor. The pastor made allusion to the meeting in some way at every service for months. Prayer-meetings pointed toward it. Sermons in reference to it were preached. We were compelled to pay at advertising rates for our newspaper notices, but we used the papers anyway. Window cards were placed in the homes of the people a month before the meeting. Cards were placed in the business houses and street cars. E. E. Violett is undoubtedly one of the cleanest, most energetic, tactful evangelists among us. He has more of the Bible committed than any man I ever met. Its words fall from his lips with a burning eloquence that brings conviction. He believes the Bible and preaches its truths. His spirit is always kindly, even under bitter attacks. Song leader Clarkson is a young man of good voice and a personality which wins wherever he goes. He was prevented from doing his usual work here on account of an attack of fever.

One hundred and four came forward during the meeting. Business men expressed surprise that such a thing could be accomplished in Lorain. One of the editors declared that if we had seventeen additions in two weeks he would give us a half page advertisement. There were nineteen the last day of the meeting. The church is strengthened in every way. We will begin at once to prepare for our next meeting. Hundreds heard of our plea who never before knew the object of our existence. We now stand second among Protestant bodies in strength. Among business men we have come to the point where we can do business on the cash basis and that without begging for favors "just because it is the church."

Victor G. Hostetter,
Lorain, O. Minister.

Growth in Portland.

All of our Portland churches have this year enjoyed unprecedented prosperity. There has been practically no report of the work of the Rodney Avenue Christian Church, of this city, since I was called to serve it last January. It has been a mission point of the Oregon Missionary Society and C. W. B. M. for several years. Since last January 48 have been added to the membership. The $500 indebtedness has been paid, the mortgage burning celebrated. Much of the credit of improvements upon the interior of the church is due to our Ladies' Aid. There has been a decided increase in contributions for local work and for missions. The spiritual growth of the congregation is most gratifying. I have been called to serve the church another year at substantially increased salary which the church will pay without the aid of these missionary boards. The steady growth indicates that a more commodious building will soon be required. We are planning for a meeting this winter. The field seems ripe. With a united, self-supporting congregation of nearly 200 members, free from all indebtedness, we feel assured of a splendid future.

Portland, Ore. F. Elmo Robinson, minister.

The Fourth Church in the Simultaneous Campaign in Indianapolis.

E. L. Frazier preached the simple Gospel with unusual power. It was said by our people that the church had never had such clear exposition of the Gospel way. Harry K. Shields led the chorus of sixty voices admirably, and stirred the people with his hymn solos. We commend him to the brotherhood as a leader and soloist of the first rank. The church had thoroughly organized personal work, and well planned advertising. Every detail of the public service was worked out in advance. A pleasing feature of our work was the maintenance of a rest room for the babies, where the Cradle Roll ladies cared for the children while the mothers heard the sermon. We feel that some of the mothers came to Christ because this arrangement enabled them to listen to the Word. In a field thoroughly gleaned, and cramped, where failure was predicted, there were 57 additions, with four since the meeting closed, up till writing this report. There were six not reported before the meeting began, making a total of 67 not reported. Of these 32 are by confession and baptism, and 35 by letter and statement. We are now ready for an increase campaign in our Sunday-school.

Chas. E. Underwood, Pastor.

Oregon.

Since last report Albany First, Ashland, Cottage Grove and Dallas have supplemented their gifts to Oregon missions and eight other churches have sent in their offerings; viz.—Halfway, $4.30; Santa Clara, $3; Thurston, $4; Elmira, $12.50; Hood River City, $7; Stayton, $7.50; Grant's Pass, $8.55 and Roseburg, $26.51. We are very glad to enroll Thurston and Elmira this year with their gifts. Of the other churches reported here Santa Clara alone reaches last year's offering. Her gift shows a gain of 20 per cent. The gift from Roseburg for 1905 was augmented by the proceeds of a missionary meeting.

In this report I wish to mention the report of the Committee on Future Work at the Northwest District Convention held at McMinnville in November, which recommended that an evangelist be employed; that he raise what money he can in the field meetings; that we have a financial committee composed of the pastors in the district who shall solicit the churches for the support of the evangelist; that first work be done at Newburg, at the earliest possible moment; that we hold meetings with such churches as Dayton, Farmington and others, where the church is not strong enough to support a pastor and hold its own meeting; that we co-operate in the support of the "Home of the Aged" at Eugene; that Western Oregon join with Southern and Northern California in a series of simultaneous meetings during the winter of 1907 and 1908.

Delegates enrolled, 60; ministers present, 14; churches represented, 16, and 3 sent regrets; 19 reported and only 3 not heard from.

It is my good pleasure to be with Brother LaDow at Central Point for a short meeting. Things are starting well.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

The Missouri State Board held its mid-year meeting at Kansas City on December 4 at the home of Mrs. W. F. Richardson. Every member was present. We were glad to have with us Sister Lampton, whose absence from the two last meetings, through illness, was so much regretted. A delicious luncheon was served by the daughters of the hostess, Misses Olive and Joyce Richardson. The state of our cause was reviewed and its greater upbuilding planned. One chief theme was the Centennial. Our auxiliaries are not working out this as we hope they will. The corresponding and Centennial secretaries as well as the state organizer, were instructed to push this to the front as fast as possible. One cause of regret to the board and, we feel, to the state, was the resignation of our beloved young Junior superintendent, Miss Martha Stout. She has served the cause so faithfully and so wisely, that we are loath to give her up. But Cupid was to be considered as well as our state work, and the love and best wishes of the whole state follow her in her new relations. We were fortunate in securing as her successor, until the state convention, Miss LaDella A. Walker, of St. Louis, who takes charge of the Y. P. department immediately. All correspondence in regard to this department should be addressed to Miss Walker at her home, 4317 West Belle Place, St. Louis. Miss Walker is a consecrated young woman, anxious to keep up the high standard of the work in Missouri, and we ask the help and co-operation of all with her, to that end. Remember, it is not easy to pick up a work from the hands of another, however competent one may be, and carry it forward to success. Miss Walker must have your help and your prayers.

A most delightful day was spent by the board in attendance on the Federation of Auxiliaries of Kansas City and vicinity. Mrs. G. B. Logan presided. The program was full. One pleasant feature was a greeting from the president of the Federation of Presbyterian Missionary Societies in Kansas City, who spoke of the good things she had learned from the methods of our meeting. A splendid luncheon was served by the ladies of the Independence Boulevard Church, at which more than two hundred sat at the first table and many others were yet to serve.

What Can Be Done in the South.

Meridian, Miss., has just had the experience of a really great meeting. The brief results in additions were promptly reported in The Christian-Evangelist and from W. M. Baker, the minister of our church at Meridian, we received further particulars which we are glad to present for the joy of the brotherhood and the encouragement of other churches with hard fields to conquer for the Master. Mississippi is said to be the most conservative state in the south, and Meridian has been one of the most difficult fields for our plea. As Brother Baker says, when the board of the A. C. M. S. becomes discouraged it can be agreed that the work is very hard, and when some of the ablest preachers get no apparent results, there is some reason for concluding that conservatism is king. To have a meeting with 51 additions, meaning an increase of 33 1-3 per cent in eighteen days, is a great victory. The meeting was begun under difficulties, Pastor Baker and Singer Hawes starting it contemporaneously with a Methodist meeting and a street fair, Evangelist R. H. Crossfield coming two days later. Brother Hawes rendered good service and Brother Crossfield showed his strength in personal work as well as in the pulpit, while he made a fine impression on the citizens. The meeting has given our brethren a stronger hold in the city, while the congregation has received fresh inspiration and has been built up spiritually. The papers were generous, giving all desired space free. With 23 additions in regular services the increase in membership since January 1 has been 74, or nearly 50 per cent. A new house of worship by 1909 is now the desire.

Illinois Notes.

At Rushville, the beautiful county seat of Schuyler county, the brethren are putting $2,500 in repairs on their substantial brick building, which will make of it a convenient modern house. It seems like nearly half our churches in Illinois are building, repairing or paying for improvements. A better class of buildings are replacing the old, much to the credit of the churches. W. E. Harman, the much loved minister, is not only caring for the improvements and the spiritual interests of the church, but he and his wife who also preaches, take care of the Bethany and Pleasant View churches, a few miles distant in the country. In many parts of our state such effort has become a necessity where we have 425 more churches than preachers. This also is the residence of Bro. Alpheus Brown, a venerable pioneer on the verge of the grave, through whose ministry several thousand people have entered the kingdom of God. With proper care and work and sacrifice there seems to be a great and useful future before this church.——At Vermont a large and intelligent audience assembled at the regular service, where G. W. Ross for some 12 years has been the devoted minister. He is pre-eminently a gospel preacher and gives the people the message of truth which feeds their souls. This for many years was the home of the late J. B. Royal, whose memory is precious in all this region. Here was raised Miss Nell Dougherty, who largely made her way through Eureka College, went to China as a missionary and there became the wife of Dr. Butchart. Here W. E. Spicer, our minister at Pittsfield, found his excellent wife. Here also were born and raised the Gillilands; one, J. H., has been preaching in Bloomington about eighteen years; the other, E. A., recently closed a nine years' pastorate at Clinton, and is now at East St. Louis. Brother Rose's daughter is the wife of a preacher and his son, still in college, is beginning to preach.——Marshall, in Clark Co., is getting some benefit and prominence on account of a recent discovery of oil and gas in the vicinity, and the church is sharing somewhat in the increased population. The house has been recently repaired, reseated and much beautified. Gilbert Jones, in his six months ministry, has endeared himself to the people and is doing a fine work for the church. He is also a well-known evangelist of power, and expects in connection with his regular work, to hold several meetings for weak churches in the county. The church has a good C. W. B. M., and all other auxiliaries for church usefulness. This is the boyhood home of J.W. Kilborn and where his parents still live. He has recently returned from a successful pastorate in Keokuk, Iowa, and is now doing fine service for the church at Mt. Carmel, Ill.——Casey and Martinsville are in the new oil regions. Business is booming, but the great enterprises of the Church of Christ have not yet received dividends. Although the head of the church is the chief depositor, he will probably be the last to realize on the stock. Is it irreverent thus to speak of our Savior's love in bestowing wealth upon his people? What shall it profit that he make his people rich, if they honor him not with their substance? In this case, however, our brethren are not large owners.——Casey has recently lost its minister, A. A. Brown, who has gone to Indiana. His place, however, will soon be filled and prosperity will follow faithful service. At Martinsville removals and death have almost depopulated this once excellent church. But the few splendid families which remain will surely see that Gospel light is not removed from the community.——The church at West Union is under the splendid guidance of J. J. Van Houton, who visits them once a month from Paris, his home. There are some splendid people here, with a commodious house and a good Sunday-school.——Hutsonville has been having a series of meetings, with W. W. Jacobs in the lead. There seemed to be but little interest so far, but the church is getting good instruction. The faithful preaching of the Gospel will not be lost. R. Layton, of West York, is about completing a year's faithful service for the church.——Palestine is taking on new life in the additions of the Illinois Central railroad shops coming to it. G. S. McGaughey is entering upon his second year of efficient service. He is a splendid man, and takes hold of the enterprises of the state like a native born. The church is old and strong, much stronger than it knows. It numbers 150 members, with all useful auxiliaries, and recognizes all public days by its ministry and offerings. Walter S. Goode, of Youngstown, O., began his ministry here. M. H. Garrard, of Laporte, Ind., entered the ministry from this church as also did L. E. Murray, of Middletown, Ind. If all the churches had been as fruitful in putting ministers in the churches as the Palestine church we would not be so scarce of preachers.——Robinson, after many years of struggle and varied history, is beginning to glow with the purpose of a new church building. How a purpose and enterprise for the Master brings life and power. John W. Moody is the splendid young minister who came over from Kentucky to help us and takes up Illinois work in a truly loyal way. The little city is growing rapidly and if the 130 Christians will crowd the work as the wave comes in, we may expect a strong, enterprising church here in a short time.——In the country, some twelve miles from Robinson, in the midst of the oil region, is the old Hardinsville church. For half a century or more it has held forth the word of life, in such a manner that a large proportion of the people are on the Lord's side. They are in a new church building with a fine Sunday-school and prospects for enlarged usefulness. P. C. Cauble, of Vincennes, Ind., preaches for them part of the time.——At Oblong, Brother Cauble gives half his time, greatly to the satisfaction and profit of the church. This is a good congregation of most excellent people who are growing into the larger usefulness of church life. It is a fine field and with wise guidance and devoted energy has a bright future before it.——At Newton our splendid minister, C. W. Freeman, is about completing two years of good work. He will probably change fields and any church needing a good man with a wise, active wife, would do well to write him at once. This is the old home of Hale Johnson, the great temperance leader and worker whom the church still mourns and greatly misses. J. W. Hanly has moved from Newton, and other removals and deaths have seriously weakened the church. This is also the home of B. W. Tate, now in a meeting at Smithsborough. He is a successful evangelist.——At Wheeler, J. G. Williams was just beginning a meeting with good prospects. The church is a little discouraged on account of recent removals and deaths, but there are plenty good people left to carry on the Lord's work in good order with proper efforts and sacrifice, and a good opportunity for growth, especially among the young people. T. H. Wilson, of Centralia, is the regular minister and is spoken of as a good preacher.——The brethren at Mason have recently repaired their house of worship and are enjoying prosperity. John S. Read, one of the members, after a clean, sober campaign, has just been elected to the state legislature. It is not always true that a man must treat and buy votes to be elected. The election of Mr. Read is a compliment to his entire district and an honor worthy of emulation. It ought to be prima facie evidence of a man's unfitness to be a law maker who so debases our ballot as to buy votes with liquor or money. The vote so bought is as un-American and base as the guilty candidate. The ballot box should give the unbiased expression of the best judgment of every voter, and he who corrupts it degrades our nation and imperils the Republic.

One way is to pay no attention to it; at least, not until it develops into pneumonia, or bronchitis, or pleurisy. Another way is to ask your doctor about Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. If he says, "Just the thing," then take it. Do as he says, anyway.

Evangelizing in Mexico.

I am making my first evangelistic trip unaccompanied by a native preacher. Our churches and outstations in the frontier are in most promising condition, but greatly in need of more workers. I have preached in Fuente, Nava, Sabinas and Nacional this week, with two baptisms in Fuente and one confession in Nacional. The people are hungry for the Gospel, and our new converts are splendid examples of fidelity. Brothers Jiminez and Camacho, our preachers in this field, are an inspiration in their sacrifice and hard work. One gets $30 (gold) per month. the other $15, paying house rent out of this; yet they are cheerful and contented and enthusiastic in preaching the Word.

No Harsh Words—126 Converts.

One of the most successful revival meetings held in the Christian Church at Charleston, Ill. in recent years closed with 126 additions—32 coming the last Lord's day and four on the night of the reception. The meeting was of four weeks' duration and was conducted by H. A. Davis, who spoke the truth in love and notwithstanding the fact that the other Protestant churches in town united in a meeting after we began and continued until we closed, he never uttered a harsh word against them, nor did anything that would in any way lower the dignity of his message. As one of the local papers expressed it, "his message breathed not only love for the sinner, but good will to all Christian people engaged in the building up of the Master's kingdom. His doctrinal sermons were plain and unequivocal, yet in the entire series of meetings not a single word was uttered by the evangelist to which an exception could be taken by even the most sensitive." A notable circumstance connected with the additions is that at least seventy-five per cent are adult men and women. Many normal students are included in the list. Brother Charlton rendered us splendid service; he bids fair to become one of our greatest singing evangelists. The meeting was a blessing to the church in every way.

Ohio.

Ohio has captured two of Indiana's preachers. They are M. G. Long, who comes from Warsaw, Ind., and H. C. V. Wilson, from Lyons, Ind. to Mt. Victory and Big Springs. We extend a most cordial greeting to these two brethren and hope they will soon become full-fledged Buckeyes and be greatly blessed in their work.——Charlie Pearce has been called to the church at Ashland recently vacated by Grant Speer and will leave Galion for Ashland Jan. 1. Ashland will find Brother Pearce and his good wife pure gold and genuine Christians.——Indiana, we are sorry to say, has captured one of our good Ohio preachers. Thos. L. Lowe goes from Athens, where he has been for six years, to Union City, Ind., with the new year. But so long as we can trade one for two, we ought not complain too much. But we didn't want Lowe to go at all. We submit, though, and wish all the blessings of heaven upon him. He will "make good" even on Hoosier soil. ——E. D. Salkeld, of Homestead, Pa., has found favor in the sight of the saints at Lakewood, Cleveland, and will soon take up his abode in that bishoprick. A hearty welcome to him also. He will find a great field in Lakewood.——E. B. Bagby will begin a meeting at Franklin Circle, Cleveland, December 30. A singer will assist if one can be found.——Isaac J. Cahill, of Dayton, will preach in a meeting at Uhrichsville where parson Darsie is leading on and on to better and better things, beginning Jan. 13.——T. J. White, the very faithful and aggressive builder at North Baltimore, has recently held a good meeting with home forces.——Violett and Clarkson stirred up Sebring. A pastoral help has been installed in the person of the new wife of bishop Sala.——W. A. Harp and wife, of Springfield, deserve the thanks of the state.——The Ohio man recently closed a very successful meeting at Lovington, Ill. Ninety-one people responded to the invitation. Of these fifty-three were men. Thirty-one young men. It was an ideal meeting. It stirred the whole community deeply. There was no excitement. People were not auctioned into the church. Only high motives were appealed to. It was a deep, devotional uplifting meeting from start to finish. The people worked like beavers. They prepared in a faultless way for the meeting. It was a joy to work with them. Some man will find a great opportunity there.——J. H. Garrison's new book on "Christian Union" and President King's "Rational Living" are furnishing good reading just now. Every preacher ought to read these books. This is especially true of each one of them. They are intensely interesting and greatly helpful. By the way, did you note Prof. McGarvey's criticism of Brother Garrison's book? It reminds us of the mixed figure of a certain sophomoric orator, "I smell a mouse, I see it floating in the air, I'll nip it in the bud."——We wish for all The Evangelist family, which by the way is getting to be almost like the descendants of Abraham, a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

A GREAT MEETING AT NEVADA, MO.

The Pastor's Side of It.

Hamlin and Daugherty have just closed one of the best meetings ever held in our city. One hundred and fifty persons came out—nearly one hundred of these by confession. This was the first meeting Brother Hamlin ever held in Missouri and before coming to us he was practically unknown here. He has done a great work in Texas, where for sixteen years he has labored for some of the strongest churches both as an evangelist and pastor.

We made no mistake in calling him. He is an ideal evangelist because he is both a strong preacher and a great personal worker. Brother Daugherty is well known to our brethren of Missouri and the central states as one of the most efficient singing evangelists in the field. Our church is now one of the largest in western Missouri, having had a net increase of over 200 members in 1906. We plan for larger things at once. The organization of our young men and women into the Baraca-Philathea classes has contributed very much to our great success. Our "prayer-list people" and personal workers committee are entitled to praise for their faith and persistence.

R. R. Hamlin.

From the Evangelist.

Months ago when the call came to me to conduct the Nevada meeting my expectations were high. Two Texas preachers—M. M. Davis and J. J. Lockhart—were former pastors there and I had heard many good things of the church and people. My experience of six weeks justifies all that had been told me and more. We were delightfully entertained and tasted of Missouri's best hospitality. The audiences were large and the interest and attention, together with an ever-deepening current of spiritual feeling, were enough to inspire any man to do his best. Men and women worked publicly and privately for the salvation of the lost. The C. W. B. M. banded themselves together before the meeting for prayer and work taking vows before God and keeping them. There was much praying and splendid singing. Brother Daugherty lead the great chorus, until every heart was singing, and often men, women and children were heard singing the revival songs in homes and on the street. W. W. Burks is a prince of pastors and in his aid to the evangelist. He is intellectual, hopeful, tactful, cheerful, spiritual—a rare combination of qualifications, and such as can be mightily used of God in his work. The Methodist said "Burks has got religion and belongs to us." His hearty "Amens" were like the cheers of friends to the soldier in battles. I never worked with a pastor who gave me better support or who watched more vigilantly to relieve the evangelist of the scores of things that demand time and attention which ought to be given elsewhere. I have nothing but good words to say of the church and its official board. I have confined my labors to Texas in the past, as there is quite a good-sized territory for one there, but if Nevada is a sample of Missouri churches, I hope to hold many more meetings in the state. Among the 150 who came forward during the meeting, were many adults, prominent men and women in business and social circles.

A Village Church Has 57 Additions.

The El Dara church, of which J. D. Williams is minister, closed a three weeks' meeting in which I was called to assist. It gives me pleasure to report the fine work of this church and minister. The building had been repaired and beautified at more than $300 expense. The congregation rallied to the lifting of all its debt, a liberal offering to state missions, and a liberal return for my services as evangelist. Notwithstanding bad weather there was a well sustained interest. Fifty converts were baptized. Seven were received otherwise. Brother Williams has organized an Endeavor society with 50 members, and a Bible study class that will meet on a week day night during the winter. Brother Williams came to us from the Baptists a few years ago. He is doing a splendid work at El Dara and New Hartford. The new converts have pledged themselves to a definite financial support of the church.

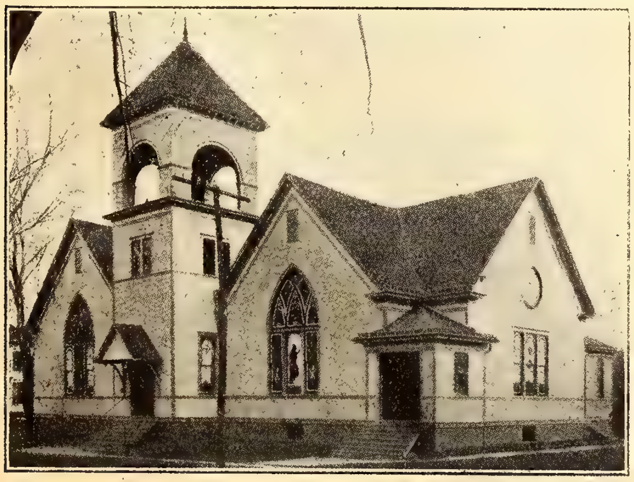
Pittsfield, Ill. W. E. SPICER.

[We have received a report of this meeting also from Brother Williams, who says that Brother Spicer won the hearts of his people by a manly, pleasing presentation of the Gospel. This meeting indicates what a village church may accomplish by a united effort.—EDITOR.]

CHURCHES RECENTLY DEDICATED.

Litchfield, Ill.

M. S. Johnson, Pastor.



New Church at Litchfield, Ill.

The church here rejoices in a great victory realized on dedication day. Our motto was: 400 at Sunday-school and a collection of $100; a full house at dedication and $3,000 in good pledges to cover balance on our new building. We realized 417 present at Sunday-school and a cash collection of $115.50, while the pledges to the new building reached $3,363.25 and volunteer pledges and cash contributions are still coming in. This will give us a little margin with which to pay interest until pledges are all collected. The church property is now worth about $15,000. With more money at our disposal we might have made the exterior of our church more pleasing and imposing, but it is difficult to see how the interior could be made more beautiful or more convenient. It will accommodate 1,000 people. The auditorium is connected with rooms on either side by large sliding doors. The rostrum is made beautiful by a large triple arch, the rear arch supported by gothic columns and capitals, and the background consisting of a large picture of the river Jordan, the work of one of the best scenic artists in the state. Visitors admire the building and wonder that we could secure so much at so small any outlay. J. Fred Jones did excellent service for us on dedication day. He has the two essentials of a good solicitor and dedicator, viz., humor and tact. We now have the largest and most modern building in town.

M. S. JOHNSON, pastor.

Marcus, Iowa.

The new house of worship was dedicated December 9 by L. L. Carpenter. The property represents a cost of $10,000. The sum of $4,000 was asked for the day of dedication which amount was more than secured. The building is a substantial frame structure arranged with every modern church convenience. The basement consists of reception hall, dining room and kitchen. On the main floor is the auditorium and lecture room (which can be made into one), pastor's and robing rooms. The audience room is seated with circular oak pews, the rest of the rooms with chairs. We have the best and most convenient house of its size in Cherokee county.

Little Rock.

At the request of the Third Street Christian Church, Little Rock, Ark., I aided them in opening up and dedicating their new house of worship. This is the second church in the city and it already numbers over 100 members. A year ago they purchased 100 feet of ground on the corner of Cross and Third streets for $3,900. On this lot they erected a beautiful, commodious building. They needed still $1,000 to pay for it. After the sermon I made an appeal and $1,147 were quickly raised. All seemed to be happy. The afternoon communion service and night meeting were both well attended. I was glad to meet J. N. Jessup, who ministers to the Tenth Street Church, which has just completed at a cost of $20,000, the chapel end of a $50,000 church property. Our cause in Little Rock is doing far better than formerly and since Brother Jessup has taken hold of the work great and permanent progress has been made. E. C. Browning, secretary of state missions, was also on hand. He appears as young as he was twenty years ago, while in Missouri.

George D. Weaver. who has for a year ministered to the Third Christian Church, has resigned and returns to Canada. The church will be temporarily supplied by Brother Browning. It was very kind in the Tenth Street Church to dismiss their morning service and Brother Jessup, with quite a number of his flock, attend the dedication. They were not only an inspiration, but aided substantially when the call for funds was made. I was never more favorably impressed with the fact that Little Rock, and, in fact, the whole state of Arkansas is a great and needy mission field.

G. A. HOFFMANN.

Conway, Mo.

Taking the place of Brother Abbott, whose little daughter had diphtheria, I preached the dedication sermon of the church at Conway, Laclede county. Joseph Gaylor, evangelist in the southwest district, led this undertaking to the splendid consummation of dedication day. When Gaylor takes hold in a town, a new church, a good congregation, and all things that spell success are sure to follow. The week preceding the dedication, I attended three county conventions in Missouri, and conducted institutes, etc. Our people are more aggressive in that part of the state than ever before.

Joel Brown.

The church here was dedicated December 16, Joel Brown, of Des Moines, Ia., being master of ceremonies. Twenty-seven hundred dollars were pledged in a remarkably short time and the church dedicated without debt. This church owes its origin to Mrs. E. F. Jenkins, who in 1898 circulated a subscription paper for a new church before there was an organization.

LEND US YOUR EARS.—Do you want a home where the roses bloom and there is "something doing" to increase your bank account every month in the year? Do you want a home where the heat of summer is tempered by refreshing gulf breezes and winters are so mild that the active labor on farm and in gardens goes on without cessation? Let us tell you about the NEW TEXAS-CALIFORNIA, extending from Corpus Christi to Brownsville, along the St. L. B. & M. Ry. The lands are yet cheap, and fertile as the valley of the Nile; the climate is unequalled in the U. S. Many members of the Christian Church have recently bought land and will make their homes there. We want active and trustworthy agents in all unoccupied territory. For descriptive literature, address Hallam Colonization Co., Denton, Texas. Sales offices, Harlingen and Brownsville, Texas.

Lovington.—I spent Lord's day, December 16, with this good church. J. R. Parker has been the faithful pastor. But failing health has caused him to seek a milder climate for the winter. This church has just closed a most successful meeting under the direction of Evangelist Charles A. Freer, of Ohio. There were almost 100 additions. The church is an old one, and quite substantial in membership and means. They have a good modern house, costing about $10,000. This is the home of Brother Finis Idleman, where he was brought up. His parents still live here. Also Bro. J. P. McKnight, of Los Angeles, Cal., was brought up at Lovington, and his father still resides here. They need a good man to locate with them, and the right man can do a great work with this church. In a quiet way they are seeking the man they need.—J. H. Smart, Decatur, Ill.

Danville, Dec. 16.—I have been very busy for a number of weeks in a social meeting with home forces, with the Second Church, in this city. There have been 70 additions to date, forty-six by baptism, the others by letter, reclaimed, and from the denominations. Among the additions were an M. E. minister and his wife, about the average in ability, who are proving of great help to us.—Andrew Scott.

Iowa.

Des Moines, Dec. 2.—Assisted in the services at the Central Church this morning; 4 additions. W. J. Wright preached a fine sermon. To-night we began our revival in the Highland Park district. Four churches co-operating. Many people were turned away at this our first service.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Mt. Pleasant, Dec. 18.—There have been nine added here recently—7 by baptism and 2 otherwise.—L. A. Chapman.

Delta, Dec. 17.—Our meeting closed with 56 additions. The attendance and interest were remarkable and would have justified a continuation of the services, but because of bronchial trouble and hoarseness on my part we were obliged to close.—W. B. Wilson, minister.

Barnes, Dec. 18.—Closed a five weeks' meeting with 21 added by baptism, 8 by statement and 1 reclaimed; a Catholic girl made confession, who has not yet been baptized because of parental objection. Eight of those baptized were from other organizations. Arrangements were made for regular preaching services. Charles Henning of Bethany, Neb., was the song leader and helper.—Orwin L. Michigan.

Adrian, Dec. 17.—We have held a short evangelistic meeting with local forces. The meeting stopped sooner than it otherwise would on account of the union revival meeting by C. H. Yatman. We had five baptisms, two other baptisms not previously reported, and one more confession last Sunday evening. V. Hayes Miller, of Petersburg, assisted in the pastoral work during our meeting.—B. W. Huntsman, pastor.

Missouri.

St. Joseph, Dec. 19.—On last Monday evening H. A. Northcutt and Frank C. Huston closed a meeting with the Wyatt Park Christian Church, this city, with 59 additions—44 baptisms. The meeting was a great blessing to the church and to the whole community.—M. M. Goode.

Springfield.—One addition Sunday, nine in Central church. Took the first C. W. B. M. offering, and although no society here we raised $20.—F. F. Walters.

New London, Dec. 17.—Our meeting of sixteen days yielded 31 additions—22 by baptism, 8 by letter, 1 from another body. Pastor E. M. Richmond did the preaching, and C. H. Stanberry.—Meeting with home forces assisted as singer, by Mrs. Duck, of Salem, O., had 17 additions, 3 by statement, 2 from other bodies, and the rest by confession and obedience. Two others were baptized during the meeting who had previously made "the good confession."—G. W. Terrell.

Franks, Dec. 18.—Closed my evangelistic work at Conway yesterday. We have good house, a church of 48 members, good Bible school and good C. E. society; everything moving nicely. I will preach for them regularly for a while. We are planning for a great meeting this next year. I am assisting Leon Couch in a meeting here. Couch is a splendid worker.—Jos. Gaylor.

Clarence, Nov. 26.—Nine added at Lemonville, 12 at Brashear and 10 at Illinois Bend since last report.—J. B. Lockhart.

Bethany, Dec. 10.—I held a meeting near here with 26 additions—20 baptisms. When the weather permits I am to return and organize.—T. J. Golightly.

Nebraska.

Ashland.—During the past year we had 22 confessions and 5 by letter.—T. Edward Cresmer.

Oregon.

Tillamook, Ore., Dec. 6.—Closed a 32 days' meeting last night with interest at high tide. Meeting should have continued until Christmas but other engagements forbade. There were 21 additions in all, 10 from six denominations; 11 confessions and 3 by statement. This was a missionary meeting for the Oregon convention so we raised money. About $175 for the meeting and between $500 and $600 for a pastor. A. W. Shaffer was singer and assistant.—Geo. C. Ritchey, state evangelist N. W. district.

Covington, Dec. 19.—Just closed my second meeting with Bro. W. I. Burrell, pastor here, with 23 accessions. Though we have had many meetings with several times as many additions, considering bad weather and bitter opposition, this is considered a very successful meeting for this place. Have found Brother Burrell a splendid co-worker. He is strong both in and out of the pulpit. He expects to close a five years' ministry here in April, and any church desiring a first-class preacher should write him.—A. E. Wrentmore, evangelist.

God the Creator.—Gen. 1:1-25.

Memory verses, 1-3.

Golden Text.—In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth.—Gen. 1:1.

Every race which has a religion has also a more or less complete tradition to explain the origin of all things. The round of the seasons, the sequence of seed, plant, fruit and seed again, the succession of generation from generation, suggest even to the faintly philosophical mind of the savage the inquiry as to the beginning of things. The idea that things have always been as they are now, or that they just happened, is not a natural product of human reason. It comes only when men are diligently trying to dispense with the idea of a creator.

The Hebrew story of the creation is, in some respects, like those of other races; in other respects, it is different. It is like them in representing that the different elements of the physical universe came into existence in some sort of orderly sequence and by the exercise of a power above man. It is unlike the others in its freedom from gross and absurd polytheistic and pantheistic elements and in the pure and lofty view which it presents of the nature of God and his relation to man.

There has been much unnecessary discussion of the alleged "conflict," and more of the alleged "harmony," between Genesis and modern science. It is no part of the purpose of divine revelation to convey scientific information about astronomy, geology or biology. When Paul tells what inspired scriptures are profitable for he does not mention these subjects.

In giving to the writer of this splendid record the idea of creation by the will of a personal and righteous God and of man as made in the image and likeness of God, the divine spirit necessarily kept the record free from those absurd and preposterous elements which mark the pagan cosmologies and render it impossible for a modern man to take them seriously. But it is nowhere indicated that the inspiration of this document was of a nature to enable its author to anticipate scientific discoveries which were yet thousands of years in the future.

What it did give him was an insight into spiritual truths which are wholly beyond the reach of science and which are vastly more important than any scientific discoveries. The truth stated in the words "God created," is vastly more vital than any details as to how or in what order the universe came into existence.

When the author spoke of the "first day," the "second day," and so on, he evidently meant days in the common meaning of the word. No one ever suspected that he meant anything else until the science of geology revealed the fact that vast periods of time were involved in the making of the world. It is not dealing frankly with Scripture to compel it, by an unnatural interpretation, to say what it clearly never meant to say, in the interest of a theory which requires that somehow Genesis and geology be brought into harmony.

One has but to read together the Hebrew and the Babylonian accounts of the creation to see that, while some of their details may have been derived from a common Semitic tradition, the spirit of God was moving uniquely in and through the Hebrew record to make it the vehicle of a revelation of himself.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

January 2, 1907.

Enlistment for Service.—Matt. 20:1-16; 21:28-32.

This householder was interested in his vineyard. And we ought to be. The vineyard of the Lord—ah! How big a thing it is! We need a vision of bigness along with the blessedness of service. We need to get out early in the morning for the Master. He is looking for us—has been looking for some of us a long while and wondering why we don't come! He wants laborers. He is willing to pay for them. He wants us to pray for more laborers. But while we are praying he expects us to get busy!

"The kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that was an householder, who went out early in the morning to hire laborers into his vineyard." This householder was a man of affairs. The kingdom of heaven is not all singing and praying. It's an affair of business. It was a busy man that the Master had in mind. He was an early riser. He didn't lay abed on Sunday morning. He was up with the robins in the summer time, and rousting about when the first street-car motorman's merry whistle cut the winter winds around the corner.

"So when the even was come the lord of the vineyard said unto his steward, Call the laborers." O, friends, the night is coming. The burden is heavy, the way seems long? Patience. It will only be a little while. "They received every man a penny." It is of the Lord. I am glad for myself and for you that it is that way. We dream of equality on earth, but are far from realizing it. It will please me to just let the "Goodman of the house" even things up for us. I reckon there will be some kicking. But remember, the kickers are last—and don't!

Some have never had an invitation to go into his vineyard. "No man hath hired us," those said whom the Lord found waiting at the eleventh hour. Does the Lord expect men—us—to go out and hunt up fellows to help do his work. It looks that way. Some things are not getting done because we haven't done it, haven't invited others to help us. What about these eleventh hour folks? They are the ones that didn't have a chance. It does not mean the one who trifled away his day of grace and usefulness and then came around whining because no man cared for his soul. But there are a lot of neglected folks and some of us are to blame! We didn't invite them to come with us and share in the sweat and sweet of the Master's service.

A penny a day is mighty small wages, you think? Well, it's a divine rule that in the sweat of our brows we shall eat our bread. But the bread of the laborer is sweet. Sweat if you want your bread to be sweet. It's a part of the recompense of toil, like the sleep of the just. "Whatsoever is right I will give you." And we can afford to trust him, who holdeth the wealth in his hands for his children. We can trust him who makes the apple bloom blow in the May of the world, who makes the grass to grow, and the flowers to spring up in the desert. He is more than just. He is generous, as the parable shows, to every one but the grumbler and the fault-finder. Let's quit—not working—but grumbling. There is no grace in grouchiness, no faith in finding fault.

"And he saw others standing idle in the market-place." O, the idlers in the market-place of souls! Souls being sold? Yes! But more simply lost by indifference, while we squander the Lord's time and money, or labor all our years for that which is not bread and can not satisfy. The command is, "Go into the vineyard." It is the command of love. It is the constraint of the Christ. It is the invitation of the Master of the household. Of course he expects us to work, honestly, faithfully and till nightfall. But all the sweet of the vineyard we may have for the taking. Help yourselves! "All things are yours," Paul says. Why won't we take and eat? Some of us actually starve to death right in the vineyard, because we are too lazy to eat or to gather the grapes of his grace for ourselves and others.

BEGINNING WITH GOD AND CONTINUING WITH HIM. (Consecration Meeting.)—Gen. 1:1. Jno. 1:1-14, 15:4-7.

Build thee more stately mansions
O my soul, as the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past,
Let each new temple—
Nobler than the last—
Shut thee from heaven
With a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free—
Leaving thine out-grown shell
By life's unresting sea.

Starting right is very commendable, but holding fast is most praiseworthy.

The years have come and gone and there is so much common to all that there is little to distinguish one from the other. But a closer walk with Jesus, more reliance upon the Father, greater love for man, complete consecration to the All-good will make 1907 be to the years of the past like an apple of gold in a picture of silver.

Guard against the slightest divergence from righteousness in the early days of the year. Tracks go out of the great union station almost parallel. Their separation at first is scarcely observable as they bear southward but soon one is seen reaching to the east and the other diametrically opposite. Determine now that you will never get further than a hand grasp away from the Saviour.

Every new year comes to us with possibilities for the creation of new spiritual worlds in which we may live and love and labor. If we permit, God will create these worlds for us and with us and pronounce them "very good," and if we will dress the garden and keep it, and disregard the tempter—tempt he ever so wisely—this paradise on earth and the city that lieth four square will so nearly resemble and our preparation here for the one there be so complete, the transition will cost us no apprehension nor scarce a pang—there will only be a joyous looking forward to glory to come.

What are you bringing over with you from 1906? Leave behind every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset you; bury with the decrepit old year all enmities and hatreds, envies and malice, avariciousness and narrowness, and renounce the card playing, dancing and every form of frivolity that offends the conscience of those living closest to Christ. But bring with you your trust in God and faith in man; your hopefulness, sanguineness and cheer; your Bible and prayers, and your zeal for the Gospel, liberality to the church and exemplification of the life of the Master.

God made the world beautiful and helpful in all its appointments. Satan's baneful influence sharpened thorns and scattered thistles; it distilled poison under the serpent's tongue and murder into the hearts of men. Satan can mar the non-resisting earth, but since Christ came he can not degrade a resisting man. God will make for you a new world and call it 1907. If you will resist Satan he will flee from you and your new world. Therein you may live a useful, happy, unsullied life, and when it is filed away with other years and at last submitted to the final inspection of the Judge of all it will be such as to mightily prevail toward securing for you the coveted "well done" and "enter in."

The consideration of first importance in purchasing supplies should be, that they be edited by a loyal disciple. Then choice should be made from disciple publications and the best taken—that means the Dowling series.

ALLEN.

Francis Withers Allen was born April 1, 1832, in Howard county, Mo. When a small boy the family moved to Monroe county. He attended the State University and Bethany College, graduating in 1854. In 1856 he was married to Susan I. Reid, who died in 1857. After teaching school he commenced practicing medicine in 1864. In December, 1864, he was married to Amanda Malvina Pearl. His first patient was Uncle John Clarkson, 42 years ago, who was also his last patient before his death. Bro. Doc. Allen, as he was commonly called, served as an elder in the Concord Church in Macon county for more than a quarter of a century. The funeral was preached at the Christian Church in Callao, Mo., and the body was laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at that place. E. J. Wright.

Macon, Mo.

BARBEE.

Mrs. J. A. Barbee passed to her reward Sunday, December 9, age 71 years, 3 months and 21 days. She had been a member of the Christian church for 56 years. She leaves a husband and seven children, one sister, and two brothers to mourn her death. She was one of God's good women and was the mother of a noble family. Funeral services by our pastor on December 11.

Taylorville, Ill. Z. Moore

CHAIN.

Mrs. Mary S. Chain, widow of the lamented Hugh Chain, Jr., fell asleep in Christ December 15, 1906, in her 53d year. She was in apparent good health, and had prepared her Sunday-school lesson and attended to her other duties on the Saturday when she was stricken. Brother and Sister Chain founded the Third Church in West Philadelphia in 1878, and worked together in its interests until the husband entered into rest September 20, 1892. Since then, Sister Chain has constantly striven to advance the cause that was so sacred and near to her heart. We will miss her presence in our meetings and her counsel in our deliberations. She leaves a daughter, three sons and two grandchildren to mourn her departure. G. P. Rutledge.

Philadelphia, Pa.

DEARBORN.

Our venerable and beloved brother John A. Dearborn, died in Kansas City, Mo., on Thursday, November 22, 1906, aged 81 years, 3 months and 17 days. He had preached the gospel for nearly sixty years, and his name was a household word among the Disciples of Christ, He was born in Cynthiana, Ky., but his parents moved to Paris, in that state, while he was an infant, and his early years were spent there. He was educated at Bethany college, graduating in the first class that went out from that institution, in 1847. He was married in 1852 to the eldest daughter of Dr. B. S. Lawson, of Cincinnati, and survived his wife fourteen years and three days. Brother Dearborn served many of our prominent churches, either in pastoral or evangelistic work, and had few superiors in the pulpit. With a mind rarely endowed by nature and improved by culture, he was an elegant and forceful speaker, and as an expositor of the word of God had few equals among his brethren. Pure in heart and life, chaste in speech, courteous in manners and spotlessly clean and neat in person, the church was indeed blessed that enjoyed his ministry. Among his pastorates were churches in Baton Rouge, La.; Cincinnati, O.; Harrodsburg and Princeton, Ky.; Marshall and Liberty, Mo.; Richmond and Newport News, Va. The last named was his last pastorate, from which he resigned some five years ago because of failing health. Since that time Brother Dearborn has made his home with his son, Clarence, in this city, and has preached as supply in many churches in this city and vicinity. For about a year he was unable to leave his room, and suffered much, but always with patience and resignation. The end came peacefully, with two of his children, his son Clarence and his daughter, Mrs. J. L. Hill, of Richmond, Va., by his side. His other son, whose home is in Chicago was unable to come. The funeral services were held in the First Christian church, of which he had been a member since his return to the city, and were conducted by the writer, assisted by T. P. Haley. His body was laid to rest in beautiful Elmwood cemetery, beside his wife and son, Lawson. He rests from his labors, and his works do follow him. His presence with us during these latter years was a benediction, and his memory is blessed.

W. F. Richardson.

FORD

Edwin Allen Ford, son of Elder G. W. and S. E. Ford, was born in Mt. Vernon, Ind., September 24, 1896, and died in West Salem, Ill., December 4, 1906. Allen was a bright boy, a general favorite among his companions and a loving, obedient son. He suffered greatly during his last illness and he bore his affliction with much fortitude. Father, mother, five brothers, one sister and many friends mourn his death. Brother and sister Ford have lost five children. Four of these have died in a little over three years. Their oldest daughter, wife of J. T. Davis, died August 23, 1903; their daughter, Minnie, December 20, 1903, and the third daughter, wife of O. E. France, July 19, 1906. Brother and Sister Ford have the esteem and the sympathy of many friends. May our Father comfort and sustain them.

C. C. Garrigues.

HUTCHISON.

Sarah Hutchison was born in Cape Girardeau county, Mo., on November 15, 1815, and died in St. Louis on December 8, 1906—91 years of age. Her parents were members of the hard-shell Baptist church—"Old Bethel"—the first protestant church west of the Mississippi which celebrated its centennial a few weeks ago. In 1844 she joined the Christian church at Memphis, Tenn., and was a member continuously to the time of her demise. Two children survive—Dr. R. M. Hutchison, of Palms, Cal., and Mrs. W. J. Miller, of St. Louis; also, a grand-daughter, Miss Anna Hutchison, of St. Louis. Burial December 12, at the old family burying place near Jackson.

STARR.

Sister Harriet Starr was called to the higher life November 30, 1906, aged 62 years, 1 month and 27 days. She was a constant member of the Christian church at Harmony, O. The funeral service was held at the home Sunday, December 2; and was attended by a large number of friends.

Byesville, Ohio. A. M. Hurd.

WITHERS.

Charles Washington Withers, son of Thomas and Jane Withers, was born near Marshfield, O., September 11, 1850, and died at his home in Marshfield December 3, 1906. Three brothers and five sisters, and five of his seven children survive him. October 29, 1871, he was married to Susan Swain. In 1870, he became a Disciple of the Christ. Though there was a period of a few years when he was negligent of his duty, he many years ago renewed his vows and became one of the most active and faithful members of the Marshfield church, where he was a deacon and a worker in all departments of the church.

The Home Department

The End of the Year.

Thou crownest the year with thy goodness.

Remember all that time has brought—
The starry hope on high,
The strength attained, the courage gained,
The love that can not die.
Forget the bitter, brooding thought,
The word too harshly said;
The living blame; love hates to name
The frailties of the dead!

—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

O friend, it has been a strange year for you; sin in it, folly in it, neglect of duty and of God in it; but if the heart is crying, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me," if the interests of life are moral ones for you, if the one worth of being alive at all is daily self-conquest to the glory of God—then bid defiance to your sin and failure, in the name of Christ forget the things that are behind, there is a year worth living ahead of you. —G. H. Morrison.

No man can pass into eternity for he is already in it. The dull brute globe moves through its ether and knows it not; even so our souls are bathed in eternity and we are never conscious of it.—F. W. Farrar.

What thou has done, thou hast done; for the heavenly horses are swift.
Think not their flight to o'ertake—they stand at the throne even now.
Ere thou canst compass the thought, the immortals in just hands shall lift,
Poise and weigh surely thy deed, and its weight shall be laid on thy brow;
For what thou has done, thou hast done.

What thou hast not done remains; and the heavenly horses are kind.
Till thou has pondered thy choice, they will patiently wait at thy door.
Do a brave deed, and, behold! they are farther away than the wind.
Returning, they bring thee a crown, to shine on thy brow evermore;
For what thou hast done, thou hast done.

—Mary Wright Plummer.

"What does it signify whether I go to the bottom or not, so long as I didn't skulk?—or rather," and here the old man took off his hat and looked up, "so long as the Great Captain has his way, and things is done to his mind?"—George Macdonald.

Grace is of a growing nature: in the way to Zion they go from strength to strength.—Thomas Boston.

Most gracious God, who hast been infinitely merciful to us, not only in the year past, but through all the years of our life, be pleased to accept our most unfeigned thanks for Thine innumerable blessings to us; graciously pardoning the manifold sins and infirmities of our life past, and bountifully bestowing upon us all those graces and virtues, which may render us acceptable to Thee. And, every year which Thou shalt be pleased to add to our lives, add also, we humbly implore Thee, more strength to our faith, more ardor to our love, and a greater perfection to our obedience; and grant that, in a humble sincerity and constant perseverance, we may serve Thee most faithfully the remainder of our lives, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

A Camp Visitor.

BY ORPHA BENNETT HOBLIT.

He rode into camp just as the preparations for dinner were well under way. The kettle was bubbling on the little camp stove; the rice was swelling in the pot; already inviting whiffs of coffee floated out to the waiting ones under the trees, and the odor of frying ham was in the air. Madame, her white locks bound snugly beneath a grey veil, was putting the finishing touches on some lemon pies, while the young ladies were setting the table, and the invalid, into whose pale cheeks the dry, invigorating mountain air had already brought a faint tinge of pink, looked expectantly from her wheeled chair, delighted with the idea of once more dining with the family.

Then arrived the cowboy—our first real cowboy—riding a beautiful dappled-grey horse, which picked its way carefully down the incline among the stones and boulders, across the little arroyo and under the clump of oak and juniper trees that sheltered our tents. A chorus of delighted welcome from the young ladies, New Mexican damsels every one, greeted him, as he swung out of the saddle and, dropping the reins on the ground before the horse—strode?—no, limped painfully toward us.

A NEW SERIAL STORY

The Home Department will be delighted with the new serial story which will begin next week. We are not going to tell you what it is all about. But you will like it, for it will be by J. Breckenridge Ellis, who wrote "A Week With the Woodneys" and "The Bronze Vase."

"AGNES OF THE BAD LANDS"

WILL BE ITS TITLE.

Do not fail to begin with the first chapter next week. It will be a story of child life and of grown-up life, and of church life. This is only one of the stories that will be published next year.

He was tall, spare and sinewy. A week's growth of thin, sandy beard covered the lower part of his face, which was burned and tanned to a leathery texture and to the color of the reddish sands of his own mesa. Ordinary in feature, the face was yet lighted by a pair of keen, friendly blue eyes, and, when he removed a much soiled and battered grey felt hat, bound about the crown with a carved leather band, we saw a shock of curly, sandy hair flattened down about a high, narrow forehead.

"Why, Will!" said one of the aforementioned damsels as she brought him a chair, "What makes you so lame?"

"Horse fell on me," said "Will" briefly. "Haven't been out for a week before to-day."

Here the dinner claimed my attention and I left him chatting with the girls, old friends of his, until it was on the table. Then, seated opposite, I found time to observe him more closely, to notice that the light-colored cotton shirt he wore was clean and fresh, as was also the bandanna loosely tied about his throat, and found my own enjoyment of the repast heightened by his evident appreciation of it, as he satisfied the hunger that his fifteen mile ride from the ranch had left with him.

In his conversation, however, I found the greatest entertainment. It became almost a monologue—just a question here and there to start a new subject, as he finished one picture after another of life on the plains and hills. His speech was correct in the main, for, although he had been born on the ranch and bred to the life of herdsman and cowboy, the F——s were a "good family" and Will had been to public school and had even spent a few terms in the territorial agricultural college, so that now, except for a few words such as "varmints," "stompede," "krel," and "that-a-way," his speech and pronunciation were fairly good.

"Yes, ma'am," he said, in answer to my question. "This is papa's land, this canyon where you're camping." (It was odd to hear the great fellow speak of "papa" as a little child might have done.) "We have three perpetual watering places on the range and this is one of them. We can always get water in the big arroyo here by digging down a few feet and 'most always it is running along on top like it is now."

"Then your cattle never dies of thirst."

"Not often, no ma'am, except in very dry seasons when the feed is pretty short they sometimes get too weak to go to water. You see our range runs the whole distance along the west side of the mountains and in through these canyons, and, when all the springs are dry except these three, we are pretty sure to find some cattle "down" on their way here. We can't do much for them then, no ma'am, only kill them right away to put them out of their misery. We have a gasoline engine for the pump at the ranch now and that helps out some. Can't anybody run it but us though, seems like. If we leave it half a day with a Mexican he's sure to get to monkeying with it and it stops on him."

"No, ma'am, I don't ever carry a gun, or a lunch or a canteen. I travel just as light as I can with just my rope and branding iron and so do all the other fellows. It is just the eastern city chaps who come out here and think they're cowboys, who pile on the decorations. They always carry such things, but most of us don't want to be bothered when we are at work."

"We have to carry the branding iron for the mavericks and the yearlings. That's most of our work, except at the round-ups, riding the range and branding. We come across an unbranded yearling, rope it and tie its legs, then build a fire and brand it. Papa's brand is J. E. F. Mine is W. F. W. on the shoulder, F. on the hip. No, we don't always brand a maverick. If we know the mother and that she belongs to another range we don't brand it, (if we're honest.) There's never any dispute over mavericks, though, for the law gives the animal in question to the state, so it isn't worth while.

"Four of us are going to work this canyon next week. We'll camp in that old cabin down the arroyo and you'll see us pretty often for a while."

"Yes, ma'am, Bird is a pretty good horse," in answer to some question about his nag. "He's getting pretty old now, though. He's ten years old. I broke him and no one else ever rides him. The men know better than to try. If he's the only horse at the krel they'll walk first. Why, I can't even put a lady on him. I tried once, lifted her 'most into the saddle, and he jumped out from under her and she went onto the ground."

"Feed your horse, Will," urged one of the young ladies. "It's hungry, poor thing. There's some hay left from what the horses had that brought us out. But don't get up, tell Felipe."

"I don't like to air my Spanish before the professor," said Will, but when the professor had assured him that the boy would probably understand his Mexican better than he would his own Castillian, he called out to our shy little dishwasher, in the soft Mexican dialect: "Oyes, Felipe, llevale el caballo por el agua y dale de comer." As the boy started to perform his bidding, he said apologetically: "I know it isn't correct, but it does to talk to the men. I can talk to them and understand, but it is different with the women. Maybe it's their voices, or perhaps they use different words or talk about different things—anyway, I can't understand a Mexican woman or make her understand me."

"No, ma'am, we have only cattle and horses now. Cattle won't feed after sheep or goats. I've herded both though. Papa began with them and when I was about ten years old I herded a flock of five hundred goats in this very canyon. I had sheep before that, but I hate sheep—can't bear the sight of one even now. They're so stupid and it's so monotonous working with them that I've known fellows to go crazy at it. Now goats are different. I had mine all named, every one, and they knew me. If the mountain lions got one, or I found one hung up dead by its wool in the bushes I could always tell papa which one it was by name. I knew every day just how they were going to act. I don't know how I could tell, but some mornings, when they started out to feed, I would just stay 'round here in camp. I knew by the way they acted, as I watched them climb up over that ridge there that the old leader would bring them back at night. Then again, other times, I knew I had to go along with the dog. They were different, some way. Yes, I was all alone here with them. I herded them and looked after them myself and sheared them all myself. I'd rather shear sheep. It's about the only thing I do like about sheep, their fleece comes off so pretty, all in one piece, but a goat's doesn't. They were fine stock, most of them Angora, but some just common goats. They gave us most of our living in those days besides the wool we sold, for they were all we needed for meat and milk, and meal for bread was cheap."

"I like cattle best though. They are some like the goats, but there is more doing with cattle. I can't explain it, but I can tell right off how a cow is going to act and how I've got to work her. Sometimes all she needs is a little rope and coaxing; then again you get one that has to be driven, and sometimes we find one that can't be coaxed or driven. She'd die first. That kind?—well, we just have to leave them till next time. It is no use trying to do anything with them. They're not many though. Yes, I can tell right off how to treat them, but I don't know how I do it."

"I don't really know when I learned to rope things. Seems as if I always knew. You see, when I was a little fellow, I had no one to play with at home and I used to go out into the krels after supper and play with the goats and calves. I guess I must have learned then. The hardest thing I ever tried to rope was a centipede. Yes, ma'am, I've done it with a horsehair for a lasso, but it isn't easy. This morning at the ranch my sister's little boy—he's four years old—found a tarantula and was trying to rope it with a string when I went out into the yard. I guess he'll be a cowboy all right."

"Will," said the invalid, "we saw a fox last night creeping along past the camp. I thought at first it was a mountain lion. Are there many wild animals in these mountains?"

"Not many now, foxes and deer, a few, and once in a great while a mountain lion, but you needn't be afraid. A lion wouldn't come near your camp, especially these bright, moonlight nights. I never saw one in the day time and we always hunt them in the dark of the moon. They don't trouble us now any to amount to anything. Once in a great while a colt will disappear, (they take horses every time in preference to cattle.) They used to be plenty, though, and we had to watch out for them. We have fifty-four pelts at the ranch. The last one papa killed with a six-shooter. We'd tracked it for hours with the dogs, and finally they backed it up against a rock and closed in on it, but it cuffed them off and sent them flying. There wasn't one in the whole thirteen that wasn't badly torn and scratched. Then it came after papa and backed him almost to the edge of the cliff. I was down below and yelled to him to drop over, but he said he was going to have a shot first, and he did, and that was the last of that lion. There's supposed to be a big bounty for their scalps, but we never could get anything. I guess this territory is dead broke."

"Please tell me, Mr. F——" I said, as we rose from the table, "what those leather overalls you wear over the others are called, and why you wear them."

"Most of the boys call them 'chaps,' but I guess that's short for some other word," he replied. "We have to wear them to protect us from the cactus and thorn bushes, for we can't pick our way when we're riding after a bunch of stampeded cattle. That's what these leather cuffs are for too. The leggins are pretty expensive. These of mine cost fifteen dollars, but they have the conchas. Some of them are just plain and cheaper."

The conchas were flat disks of metal, perforated in two places and fastened in a line down the outside of the leg with thongs of leather tied through the perforations.

"See what a handsome fob I have for my watch," he said, drawing a good gold watch from his pocket and displaying a notched leather fob. "An old Mexican we have down at the ranch cut the ear off my boot last week and made that for me—for luck, he said, but my horse stepped into a hole that very morning and nearly broke my leg."

"That would not have been a new experience for you, though, Will," remarked one of the girls.

"No, not exactly. One leg, both collar bones, two ribs, both arms, one of them twice, and, last summer, my neck twisted until I wished it had been broken and done with it. It isn't that I'm reckless, or ride wild horses for the fun of it. I'm lots more careful than most of the other boys. Looks as if I might be hoodoed."

"How about your heart, Will?" mischievously.

"Oh, that's all right, the soundest part about me." But his face took on a deeper tinge of red and the sheepish smile that played about his lips belied his words. He hastened to change the subject.

"I broke the crystal of my watch not long ago," he said. "You see, ma'am," turning to me, "we keep just one horse up at night and turn the rest out to feed. In the morning one of us rides out and brings in enough to use during the day. We got a pretty lively bunch together that morning, five of us fellows were bucking all at once, and two of us lost our watches in the krel and they got stepped on. When we found them both crystals were broken, but mine was still running. It's a pretty good old watch, I think, to stand that."

So passed the early hours of the afternoon. He caught one of the swift, little black lizards which were darting about the trunk of the old juniper tree to show us the beautiful turquoise color of its throat and under parts. Escap-

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Costs Nothing to Try.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purposes.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but, on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

ing, the little creature left a part of its tail in the horny hand of its captor. "But it doesn't hurt him," he assured us. "They always do that-a-way and he'll grow another in just a little while."

He described to us the other canyons of the mountains. Rucker, so wild and broken that even the poines, trained to rough riding in the hills, found it difficult to get up into it laden with "just enough bedding to keep a man from freezing to death at night;" Fillmore, famous for its mine, its beautiful little waterfall and the great clumps of wild columbine that grew beside it; and Van Patten's, noted for the early romance in the life of its owner, when, an adventurous young soldier, he woed, won and stole away from her father and her tribe the daughter of an Indian chief and hid her away in the canyon till he could make his peace with her people. "I like Soledad best of all, though," he said, and, looking about the well-wooded hollow, divided by the boulder-bordered arroyo and rimmed about by heights, whose jagged, sunlit peaks pierced the wonderful sky of New Mexico and shut us completely away from the world, we agreed with him.

A true lover of nature he showed himself to us, and a brave and manly character, strong, yet tender and affectionate, and when finally he rode away he carried with him our genuine respect and admiration.

"If they are all like that," I began, as he disappeared behind the rocks.

"But they are not, unfortunately," said the invalid. "Many are, perhaps most of them. You will see another side sometime, perhaps."

I saw it sooner than she had expected. The very next day three brutes in human form came riding down the canyon. For an hour we had heard their shouts and cries above us, and when they appeared we understood the cause. The one riding in front was dragging at a rope, the other end of which was fastened about the neck of a cow, half strangling her as she pulled back and resisted, emitting continuously a piteous, groaning noise, while the two burly fellows behind belabored her with their ropes and quirts. Her face was covered with blood, for they had knocked off one of her horns, and her body was bruised and scarred with their blows. Dragged slowly past our camp, at the top of the incline she lay down and then began a torture that was sickening to witness; kicks from their heavy spurred boots, blows from rocks and whips, until finally, in desperation, she struggled to her feet and they dragged her over the hill. Not far. Evidently she lay down again, for in a few minutes one of the men appeared at the tents and, explaining that they were compelled to kill her, asked us to lend him an axe and a knife. This we gladly did, thankful that the poor beast's torture was to end. A few hours later they rode back, the meat from her carcass dangling from each side of their saddles.

"However," said our gentle invalid, as we sat discussing the affair, "Give even the devil his due. Those men had self-control enough not to swear in our hearing. Not one oath during the whole miserable business. Do you remember?"

We remembered, but down in the canyon the next day the bleating of a calf robbed of its mother reminded us too forcibly of their cruelty to make that memory weigh very heavily in the scales of our opinion.

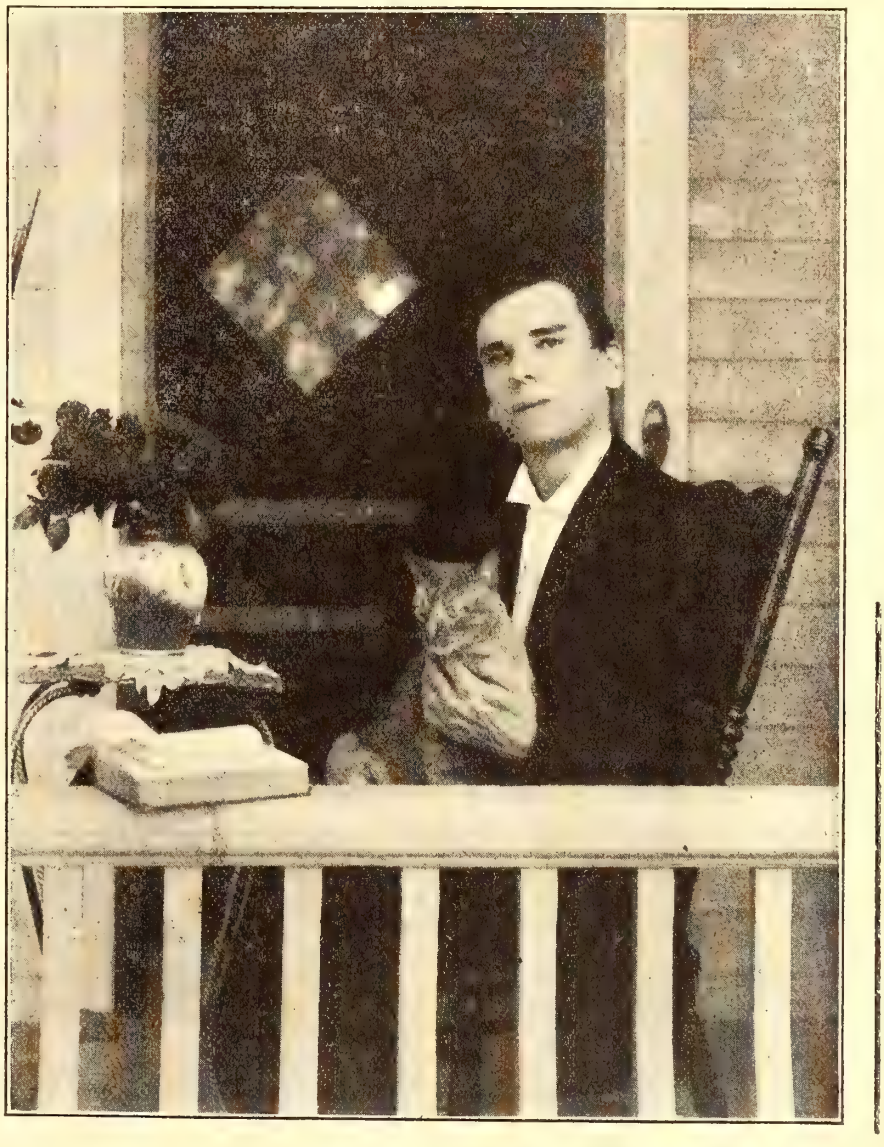
Advance Society Letters.

By J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Here he is at last—Felix of Missouri. Please notice his disturbed expression. This is not habitual with him, but he is like many people who dislike reading; put a book before him, and he is miserable. If the book could only have been a mouse, he would have perked up more; but it was impossible to secure a mouse for this occasion; it was all we could do to secure the photographer. I do not know, but possibly Felix has caught sight, in that paper, of the word, "Federation," and is saying in his own way, "Please stop my subscription." That is a silk tie just above Felix's crook of the neck, and above the tie is my own countenance, concerning which it would be unbecoming in me to speak at length. The tie is not one of those bought things, ready-made, but is just a long string that I did up with my own hand. You can find the hand in the picture if you look carefully. The hand seems to have the mumps, but in reality it is straining every vein (pray observe the veins) in an effort to hold Felix at bay. Felix is exerting every muscle to escape being kept at bay, for he dislikes water, especially in large quantities. He is not so timid, however, about milk. Yet even about milk he is particular. When the girl brings the warm, fresh milk in the evening (we do not keep a cow because we cannot afford it—if this touches any one's heart, please don't send me a cow, for none of us can milk), it is useless to offer Felix any of the pale-blue liquid left over from the noon lunch; he will have the unskimmed article, and he cries and waves his tail until he gets it. I am sorry you can't see his tail in the picture, but you can imagine it at the other end of him.



FELIX AND THE WRITER OF OUR NEW STORY AND THE "ADVANCE SOCIETY."

My mother and I were talking about this page not long ago, and she thinks it ought to be broken up more—that we have been printing it too solid. That's why I have made a new paragraph here, not because I am done with Felix. Of course if breaking up the page will lead more people to read it, it ought to be broken up. Perhaps it will look like conversation. Anyway, at Christmas time, all things should be different, and even the children ought to go in and out at the front door, and eat peanuts in the house. I am glad this is Christmastime, and I wish a lot of people who read this, might get just one tiny bit more of pleasure out of the holidays on account of the Advance Society. I don't say I wish every one who reads this might enjoy it, because I don't think it much fun wishing for the impossible, and it is simply impossible to please everybody, whether it's about a church-choir, or the way you cook corn bread (so many insist on putting salt in it.) As to a church-choir needing salt—better make another break here.

I told you long ago that when Brother Pinkerton went to the general conference at San Francisco, he found that Felix was better known there than himself. And when I came here to Arkansas, the fame of Felix had preceded him. And yet that cat cares nothing for fame. The great evangelist, S. M. Martin, who had 376 converts at a meeting at Plattsburg, Mo., has just written my father, saying, among other things (his home is Red Bluff, Calif., a name, by the way, that suggests the Ozarks): "I always read what 'Breck' has in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I can just see him in it all. He amuses me very much at times. And Felix!" Here language fails him; and those who know Brother Martin know that he is indeed overwhelmed when he has no more words.

The great evangelist Herbert Yeuell, who has recently established our first church in New Hampshire—what do you think? He is here in Bentonville holding a meeting for us. We trust he will have a mighty effect for good, and it does seem that he has already affected the weather, for it is beautiful with snow. He and Felix picked up a warm friendship from the first, and he is now carrying some old-gold hairs around on his trousers, unless he worked mighty hard since I last saw him.

You want to hear about our missionary's Christmas tree, I know you do. But just remember, please, that although you are reading this at Christmas time, I am writing it a good while before Christmas. That's the way we editors have to do—pretend that we've feasted upon brown turkey when in reality that turkey 's still gobbling in the coop; and as for me, I haven't a turkey even to gobble. I will have to do the gobbling myself. In that picture—

I say, in that picture, you have a view of part of our front porch. You look right through the hall and see the square window opposite the front door. That is a doorbell just over my shoulder, but it doesn't ring loud enough to be heard, so it is not so annoying as it might be. However, sometimes the company comes around to the back door. I think we ought to have a poem at Christmas time, if you don't mind, so I have written one. I can't say that it is exactly cheerful, but nobody wants to laugh all the time. It's considered quite the thing to dedicate one's poems to somebody, so we'll say that this one is dedicated to E. M. R., of Moberly, Mo., not that it is personal to her, or that it expresses any history in my own life; you may just consider it as a mood, or fancy—or you can skip it if you please, for you'll find me waiting for you at the end of it. We will call it

CHRISTMAS MEMORIES.

One goal there was toward which I toiled,
  One point where every purpose met,
As in old times the exile strove
  To gain his rightful coronet.
I failed—ah, weary length of days!
  Seemed life's dear radiance to have set.
I cast myself in the low grass—
  Behold! there bloomed the violet—
    (I did not ask, then, to forget)

The one I loved I knew—too well!
  Would soon be putting out to sea.
The tide was ebbing—ebbing fast,
  It slipped my bark away from me.
Lost in the mist his farewell smile,
  His hand in mine no more to be;
But through my tears God sent the light
  The rainbow arch of heav'n to see.
    (Sure promise of eternity.)

The years have crumbled all away
  Till prostrate in the dust is lain
That arch of Triumph that my dreams
  Reared, for the one I loved, in vain.
The world is young, but I grow old,
  And friends are sweet, but friendships wane.
It almost seems, in my small world,
  That only Christ and I remain.
    (He bore alone His pain.)

What could I do, since youth is fled—
  Which he who wears bears brightest gem—
Since friends are gone—who courage gave Life's blackest shadows to condemn—
Since dream of power is fled—with which
  Life's current once I thought to stem—
If Christ had not, on Christmas morn,
  Been born long since, in Bethlehem!
    (For then, for then my Hope was born,
    Was cradled there in Bethlehem.)

I have a letter from Mrs. Helen E. Moses, the honored President of the C. W. B. M. She writes from Indianapolis, among other tidings: "I feel almost like one of your Advance Society members, although I will soon be — years old." (Now, let no one think the number I have omitted larger than it is!) "I like your work thoroughly (namely, the Av. S.) and sympathize with you in it. I like cats, too, and am waiting with the rest of the folks, for the promised picture." (Just feast your eyes aloft.) Here comes, also, an illustrated post card from Mrs. Moses, showing the mission house at Oberlin, Jamaica, and saying: "I am glad we may look for Felix's picture soon. Have just read the last chapter of the 'Bronze Vase.' You are simply dreadful. Have you no thought of a woman's curiosity? WHICH? Well, you are hopeless! Christmas greetings to all."

Let's make another paragraph. This is from Lena Beamer, Smithfield, Mo.: "I am writing you again, you see. I have just finished the 'Bronze Vase.' It is a fine story." (You are right, there.) "Congratulations. I am very anxious to see Felix. Witch, Winks and Mother Goose send greetings. I don't think it fair for you not to keep the rules of the Av. S." (Now who said I didn't?—or is this an insidious way of trying to find out if I do?) "Have you had snow in Arkansas, yet?" (Yes, we have it yet, but as it fell only last night, we must not be impatient.) ("We had a large snow before Thanksgiving. If you didn't —well—I always did like Missouri best for everything, and I always did say Missouri leads. Hurrah for the 'best-ever' state! Where are Carl and Clarence Per Lee? I smell apples and that means goodby." (Are there any apples outside of Arkansas? But I suppose they are some we shipped to Missouri. I do not deny that for a varied assortment of snows, hails, sleets, north winds and muddy roads without bottom, and east winds, and incredulity, Missouri leads the earth. We may beat 'er on rains, but we simply have to throw up our hands before her other specialties).

Mrs. J. R. Goodwin, Abilene, Kan.: "I have been unable to get an appropriate book for Drusie, so will ask you to get and send it, as I know you have nothing else to do." (Aye, aye!) "I send one dollar for some book, 25 cents for mailing, and 50 cents for a box of stationary to be put on Drusie's Christmas tree." (I hope, considering all the stationary Drusie is getting, that she'll write a little oftener for our page! By the way, I have mailed to her five handsome books, all interesting and appropriate, I think; they ought to help out her Christmas in lonesome China. After all, though, it is not so lonesome for her; she has always heavenly company.)

Grace Everest, Oklahoma City: "Well, Harry Buckley, I've been to the dollar counter, but I couldn't find a suitable present for Drusie there; however, I can get her a good pair of gloves for $1.25, so with your money and mine together, we will keep our missionary's hands warm through the winter. I have to give an oration before the English class this week—it makes me shiver just to think of it; we are allowed to choose our own subject." (Why not speak in French or German, then, they won't know whether it's good or bad.) "I selected a quotation that I used a month ago: 'For the chance to help some other, keep an open eye.'"

I trust each will keep an eye open for Drusie's Christmas tree. Next week our new continued story begins, and the week after that we will tell about what hung on our missionary tree, so that will give all time to get to the celebration. A beautiful envelope, decorated with holly has just arrived, "From the North Wind," it says; so it must be from Missouri. It contains $5 for our Christmas tree. I hope my mail from now on, for awhile, will fairly bristle with Christmas presents for Drusie.

AS WE PASS THROUGH THE WORLD.

BY LIDA C. TULLOCH.

Amy Stewart and Edith Lacy, two young teachers in a city school, were on their way to the dining-room the morning after their arrival at a new boarding place. As they passed through the lower hall, Amy noticed a little child who seemed to shrink within the shelter of some coats hanging in a recess.

"Good-morning," she said pleasantly.

The child did not reply, so she said again: "Good-morning, dear."

Only a scowl of the child's brows rewarded her.

"Don't notice such an unmannerly child, Amy," urged Edith. "Breakfast is waiting."

"Poor little chap!" said Amy, pityingly as she followed Edith. "Perhaps he's sick."

"More likely cross," returned Edith.

The next morning the same sharp face looked out from among the coats, and again Amy said, "Good morning, dear."

There was no answer.

"Do you not say 'good morning' to anyone?" she asked.

The child shook his head.

"Why not?"

"Don't want to!" was the reply, in a curious, guttural tone.

"Oh, but you must want to. It will make you feel better all day, and people will like you, and you will like them. Now, think it over to-day, dear, and tomorrow see if you cannot find that little tongue of yours and make it say 'good morning.'"

With a kind smile and a soft pat on his tumbled hair, Amy passed on to the dining-room, with Edith grumbling beside her.

"I should think we have enough in school to worry us without seeking children outside," said Edith.

"This little fellow appeals to me for some reason," replied Amy. "I am sure he is not happy. He looks like some elf who has wandered out of his sphere, and is not yet adjusted to his surroundings. I am determined to make friends with him."

"Why not give him candy? That is what usually brings children around."

"I do not like to buy a child's friendship."

"Well," laughed Edith, "it's your own affair, but I'm afraid you'll have only your labor for your pains."

"I wonder if your elfin friend will be waiting for you," was Edith's remark the following morning, as the two girls went down to breakfast.

"I hope so," said Amy. "We are earlier than usual and I can give him more time. Oh, see, there he is! Good-morning, my dear. How do you do?"

After a moment's waiting there came from among the coats something that sounded like "mornin'."

"Why, we've found that nice tongue!" she said brightly. "Now see this card I've brought you. Here's a picture of a boy just about as big as you, and he's out in the sunshine running and playing."

The child shyly put out a thin hand for the card.

"Take it in to the front window where you can see it," Amy urged. "Don't stay in that dark corner. Come, we will go in together."

Much to the astonishment of Edith, who was looking on, the child suffered himself to be drawn from among the coats and led to the parlor. Thus seen outside of his shelter he proved to be a thin fellow, whose small, sallow face wore an unhappy expression.

"What an unattractive child!" said Edith unsympathetically, when Amy, after settling the boy in the parlor, rejoined her.

"Yes, poor little fellow!" was the response. "I am more than ever sorry for him. His mother told me last night that since he was ill with scarlet fever he has not been able to speak distinctly. He doesn't want to play with other children, and hides in corners by himself."

"Why doesn't she take him out of doors more?"

"How can she, when her time and energy are given to earning a living for her family? What the child needs is to be cheered up; to be made happy. And by the way, his name is Felix, which means happiness, you know! What a misnomer!"

"Isn't it! Well, I must say you seem to be gaining a quick victory!"

"I do not consider victory won yet. I have made a beginning though."

It was not long before Felix, instead of hiding behind the coats, posted himself at the front window to watch for his friend's return from school. Shyly, at first, and still with something of a frown on his brow, but gradually growing bolder, until he even ran to the door to greet her, his face bright, and a pretty smile on his lips.

True to her theory, Amy forebore to buy these concessions. A caress, a little story, were varied only occasionally with candy or a toy, and one never-to-be-forgotten day she took him for a trolley ride into the country.

His devotion to her grew with each day, as did his mother's gratitude.

One evening when the two girls were seated in their room, a timid little knock was heard at the door. When Amy opened it there was Felix.

"Why, Felix!" she said. "I thought you were in bed long ago!"

"Mit Amy," the child said, slipping his little hand in hers, with pretty faith, "will you come wif me to get water? I 'fraid."

"Yes, I'll go with you this time," Amy said, as they went downstairs together. "But my Felix mustn't be afraid of the dark; he must learn to be brave."

When she returned to the room Edith began to remonstrate with her. "Amy," she said, "you give up entirely too much of your few hours of leisure to that child. He will get to be a nuisance. Why do you do it?"

"Do you remember, Edith," said Amy gently, "those lines you read the other day and liked: 'I shall pass through this world but once: Let me do what good I can'? I have taken them for my watchword."

A change came over Edith's face and she did not speak for a moment. Then she said: "I remember. I thought the sentiment beautiful, and had much to say about it. But you, Amy, instead of talking, put it into practice. I am sure this world will be better for your having 'passed through it.'"

—While Christmas sales have been enormous, we can yet supply all our patrons with the world's best books promptly and at lowest prices.

—When in doubt, turn to the safe side. That is another way of saying—order your Bible school supplies of this House. Otherwise there is little room for choice, but ours cost no more than inferior grades.

—One Kentucky preacher sent us twenty-seven new subscribers and secured three sets of our porcelain china semi-vitreous dinner sets of forty-two pieces each. We have more of these beautiful table services that we offer as premiums for nine new subscribers to The Christian-Evangelist.

—The enterprising F. J. Yokley, of Canton, will wait for the opening of the doors at Pittsburg with his lamps trimmed and burning. He already has numerous credits on his transportation account to Pittsburg, 1909, by reason of helpful co-operation with this House. Let others emulate his foresightedness.

—Multitudes of our preachers are securing "Helps to Faith," by J. H. Garrison, by sending us one new subscriber accompanied by $1.50. Most of them add "Victories of Faith," by E. L. Powell, by sending another new subscriber. Any preacher can in a similar manner secure one or both of these literary and spiritual gems.

—The 1907 volume of The Christian-Evangelist will doubtless be the most splendid trophy of religious journalism the world will have seen this side of January 1, 1908. Renew your subscription at once and secure entrance for the entire volume into as many new homes as possible. This is a form of missionary activity most commendable.

—We gained as many new Bible schools during November as during the entire previous year. This signifies that the people are learning they can purchase the Dowling supplies at as low prices as are being asked for other literature greatly inferior in scholarship, adaptability to modern conditions, and even in mechanical make-up. Samples sent on application.

—Notwithstanding the great haste in filling orders for Bible school literature the eye must momentarily linger on the beautiful testimonials paid to our Bible school literature by superintendents, secretaries and treasures whose schools have used them for from one year to a quarter of a century. Such expressions of gratitude and fellowship constitute a large part of the reward coming to the modern publisher.

—It is gratifying to know that many schools heretofore using denominational Sunday-school publications of different names and types have learned that they are not nearly so helpful as those of their "own faith and order," and are returning for supplies to this House, whose Bible school literature is designed to transform the children of the Disciples of this generation into the stalwart Disciples of Christ of next generation.

—Miss Eva Lemert, formerly of Kansas City, perhaps the most successful Bible school worker in our ranks, has a department in "Our Young Folks" for studies in methods and reports of successes in the actual management of Bible schools, that makes this paper one of our most valuable publications. It is only 75 cents per annum. Sister Lemert makes single issues of her department worth more than that to busy teachers and perplexed superintendents.

—During the last week we received perhaps the largest number of new subscribers by singles and twos ever coming to this House in the same space of time. Notwithstanding this and the usual Christmas festivities, we are pleased to note the following new clubs at $1.50 each. Men and women deeply in earnest seem determined to continue their efforts to place The Christian-Evangelist into 100,000 homes until this Centennial aim has been fully achieved.

—Discriminatingly compare our news service with that given by any other Christian newspaper and the palm will be awarded us. We may not have chronicled that Bros. K. L. Sects and Hit M. Hard of Postem and Knockem exchanged arenas last Saturday night, but movements of men in whom the brotherhood is interested are reported as well as all that pertains to the real progress of the kingdom of God's dear Son. We believe The Christian-Evangelist is the best real news vender among us.

—The St. Louis "Republic" thus comments on one of our books that is coming into large appreciation by the reading public—a book that ought to be studied by every man who sees but dimly through the vail intervening between earth and heaven:

RELIGIOUS AND SOCIOLOGIC.

"Helps to Faith" is the work of J. H. Garrison. He terms it a contribution to theological reconstruction. It is an effort to carry the argument in favor of Christianity further back than it is usually carried, so as to meet every man on his own ground where he is, and to lead him thence, step by step, to the acceptance of Jesus Christ as affording the only revelation of God and the only religion which can fully satisfy the needs of men. Beginning with the foundation fact of human nature itself, with its religious instincts and religious needs, it aims to lead the sincere and honest searcher for truth from fact to fact until the mind is prepared to receive the Christ of the Bible as the fulfillment of the prophecies of man's inner being—its intuitions, its capacities, its needs—as well as the fulfillment of the prophecies written by holy men of old. It is the author's belief that it is a timely book, adapted to the religious needs of many, who, to-day, are disturbed in their inherited beliefs, and are seeking for some more substantial basis for their faith. It is his sincere hope, too, that the book will in some humble measure meet the wants of this class of people and serve to lead many a doubting soul into the light and joy and strength of a clearer and stronger faith. It is published by the Christian Publishing Company of St. Louis.

—All that is needed is simply "precipitation" to secure from the preachers of this brotherhood a public and almost unanimous declaration that the intelligent loyalty of The Christian-Evangelist to the true principles of this Restoration and the spirit in which its propaganda is conducted is most conducive to this cause we all love and for which we plead. Reports come to us from every realm of the brotherhood that as never before preachers are looking to The Christian-Evangelist as our chief newspaper hope for the future. If in this respect those preachers would give their sentiments expression in the form of lists of subscribers they would quickly make of this paper a medium of sufficient power to make this current Reformation conform to the ideals of its founders and, what is more desirable, to the will of God, as water conforms to the outlines of the pitcher. Why postpone? The hour has struck. Let all who believe in the principles advocated by The Christian-Evangelist act unanimously, enthusiastically and right now, and the future will soon be assured.

A Morning Star.

I am rejoiced to note the evidences of The Christian-Evangelist's prosperity. An increasing subscription list for The Christian-Evangelist is a "morning star" of promise. I think that we can go on a while longer, feeling that "life is worth living." It means much to this great brotherhood of whose mind and spirit the paper is the loftiest exponent. With a religious journal the dollars and cents prosperity is secondary (albeit without it no paper can accomplish its mission). The prosperity is only a symptom. It indicates that the advocacy of the paper is growing in favor. In this case it is another demonstration of the truth that "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." The Christian-Evangelist has been leading us out into the spirit that giveth life.

Little Rock, Ark. J. N. Jessup.

WHAT OUR FRIENDS ARE SAYING

I am sending you herewith $3.00 for a new subscriber whose name you will find on enclosed pink slip. Wish also to renew my own subscription. I wish I could secure for your paper one hundred new subscribers and have them all enjoy the paper as much as I do. I hope to send a few more names soon and thank you in advance for the large returns I know I will receive for money invested.—Lydia Hadler, Bloomington, Ills.

I enclose $1.50 for my renewal. I have been reading The Christian-Evangelist for more than fifteen years and words can not express my appreciation of the good I feel it has done me. I have always been thankful that I happened to start with it instead of a paper with a harsh, critical spirit for the paper I read has more influence over my life perhaps than any other one thing. I shall always speak words of praise of it and insist on people reading it.—Mrs. R. A. Mingle, Chattanooga, Tenn.

I wish at this time to thank the editors of The Christian-Evangelist for the surpassingly fine reports which have appeared of the convention. We could ask nothing better. The reports are written in the spirit which characterized the convention throughout and nothing can be presented to the brotherhood concerning the Buffalo Convention which will please us more than that the spirit of harmony, fellowship and prayerful desire for the full coming of the Kingdom which pervaded every session, shall pervade the churches also as a result of the meeting. The convention was not only missionary, it was a mission in this city, the influence of which will abide to the advancement of the church.—R. H. Miller, Buffalo.
